

Palau

Volume 4
Stories and Chants
Index on botanical, zoological and Palauan words

Please note this copy is read-only, and not suitable for sharp printing.

The large 9 x 12” full printed set of Palau Volume 1-7 is available for sale at the Belau National Museum and Etpison Museum gift shops for USD $175.

All proceeds from this non-profit translation project will be used to re-print these books.

Riamel Football fruit tree. EK aquarelle

HAMBURG SCIENTIFIC FOUNDATION

RESULTS OF THE
SOUTH SEAS EXPEDITION
1908-1910

PUBLISHED BY DR. G. THILENIUS
DIRECTOR OF THE HAMBURG MUSEUM FOR ETHNOLOGY

II. ETHNOGRAPHY: B. MICRONESIA

AUGUSTIN KRÄMER: PALAU
VOLUME 4

Translated by Dr. Carmen C.H. Petrosian-Husa

Disclaimer Statement

This translation is a product of the Ethnographic Translation Project funded through a German Government grant in partnership with the Krämer Ethnography Translation Committee based in Palau. The contents and information contained herein do not necessarily reflect the views of the German Government. The rights for the publication, as a whole or in parts, of all the volumes of the Results of the South Seas Expedition 1908 – 1910 rest solely with the Hamburg Scientific Foundation in Germany. The Krämer Ethnography Translation Committee would like to thank the Hamburg Scientific Foundation and the Hamburg Ethnological Museum for their assistance and continued support toward this project.

PALAU

BY

PROF. DR. AUGUSTIN KRÄMER

VOLUME 4

SECTION VII: STORIES AND CHANTS

SECTION VIII: INDEX ON BOTANICAL, ZOOLOGICAL AND PALAUAN WORDS

HAMBURG
FRIEDRICHSSEN, DE GRUYTER & Co. m. b. H
1929

Published by the Krämer Ethnography Translation Committee (KETC)
volume layout/preparation by Mandy T.Etpison

2017
reprint © Belau National Museum/Etpison Museum

Table of Contents.		page
Section VII Stories and Chants
a) Common legends concerning the early history.
1. The creation of the spirits and the land	1
2. The giant a Guap and the creation of Palau
3. The ancestors of Mlagél Latmikáik and their creations, wealth and poverty	2
4a. The magic of getting together (with a chant)
4b. Súměs and Gogádu
5. The house with the stone pillars. Tangalbád	3
6. Jegád re ngél, the creator of the sun and Gogit, the man in the moon
7. Jegád re ngél, the creator and his sister Magád ra ngădăsákěr	5
8. The immigration of galid spirit aUgélkeklau from the east	7
9. How the money came to Palau. The money island Ngorót	10
10. The story of Melíp and Gabělebál, who drifted east	13
11. The Galid spirit Bói with his schools of fish	17
12. The spider Mangidáp rutkól and human sacrifices on Ngarekobasáng (with a chant)	19
13. The master builder Gorágěl and his mother, the snake Bersóiög	24
14. The story of the shining pearl shells, of the fish-women Diletekú, of the land-fisher a Tmělógód, and of Ugér roisáng (Ngira idemăi)	26
15. The Children of lild (thin bamboo) — Ngalekél a lild	31
16. The story of Ugělsúng, the death-crab Galauoságal, and the sailing race for the ngas-twíg	32
17. The stories of
a) Típětípakmiěg (with the magic chant gómsaubukl) and Góbak ra ibedagál	36
b) Góbak ra iláměs	40
c) Gosilék (with a chant of Góreng and Máriar)	41
d) Frog King	42
18. The aviator Klubud singál	43
19. Milad, the breadfruit tree of Ngíptál, the big flood (kloul dáob) (with chant Terkélěl)	46
20. The decline of Ngáruangěl and the immigration of its inhabitants to Pelau	51
b) Stories of the individual districts.
NGAREGOLÓNG
21. The moon child of Nggeiangěl	53
22a. The destruction of Nggeiangěl
22b. The typhoon of Nggeiangěl	54
23. The owl from Nggeiangěl
24a. The Galid spirit Malauvát on Nggeiangěl.
24b. Pelú ra Bigákět
25. How the constantly crying boy Ngoidoid from Nggúi was satisfied
26. The floating Bai	55
27a. Túrang of Ngaregúr and Palau rengeregúr
27b. The dam of Ngaregúr
28a. The louse of Ngatmél
28b. Migovatmél and the destruction of Ngatmél
28c. Ngirabaliau
29. The hanging Delép	56
30a. Diltegógo and Ngiratei and how Ngabúkěd became so rich	56
30b. Ngiratei’s canoe	57
30c. Tegógo’s fishing canoe
31a. Dragging the corpse in Gólei (Gotemátěl)
31b. Funeral or True relatives
32. He fell in the space in between in Kiok
33. Dingál a dúi and Dups gasél from Gólei and Ngurusár	58
34. The breadfruit tree in Gólei and Ngurusár
35. Geiěgei and Gokéok, the two brothers těrúł’ludam, who caught with two hooks one fish
36. How Ngaruau escaped unnoticed from Gólei
37. Alternate chants(klakelál) in Ngarabau	59
38. How Rimirěgburned the people from Melekei in the Bai
39. How the proudNgěděkeibecame Ngedebug to be her husband
40. The Táng l bad at Ngaregúr and the golubás-lizard	61
41. The cunning Geróng
42. The much-loved Dileáol dil (with a chant)
43. The abandoned Galibosáng (with a chant)	62
44. How a husband tested his wives	63
45. The prisoner in the basket
46. Galaióng and Galapúp, the captured devils
47. Ngirakikimói, the once again accepted husband	64
48. The unfaithful Dira derúbok and why the north rules over the south
49. Ngirakaderáng or how Goréor and Mangal’láng became friends	65
50. Bekěu rebóděl the courageous one from Ngarebóděl and the betrayedGougelúiěb from Ngril	66
51. The beautiful Rěgěkěd from Ngrabau	67
NGARÁRD
52. The clubof Utáoěr and the betelnut palms of Ngesiseg
53. The emotionally cold Ngiraingólöm and the revenge of the spurned woman Ngarapělang	68
54. The birds of Ngarák	69
55. The Sensual Wife Of Kesól From Ngaradermáng
56. How the a Ilói experienced satisfaction	70
57. Kerai lě galíd and the sun child in Ngabúkěd .
58. Gobagád ruau, the female constructor of Ngabúkěd
59. Túlei, who decapitated his lover (with a chant)	72
60a. The story of Teguliaur in Ngabúkěd, Ngivál’s destruction, and the courageous Ngira ngě melás	73
60b. True and false hero	76
61. How Ngira kloultáog took revenge when he became rich
62. The cripple Pelúai and Medúg the giant	77
63. The squid in the river aLmet melásăg in Ngaregobatáng	78
64a. The quarrelsome fishermen
64b. The aphrodisiac of Ngirakerenguáng’s
65. The superstitious husband from Keklau	79
66. The galid spirit of the mountain Ngulitěl
67. The bound curlew
68. The lost son
69a. The naughty boys who died in their mother’s womb

	page		page
69b. The quarrelsome women of Ulimáng (rats and cats)	79	97. How Tagetbós brought the first betel-vine to earth, hich brought him his swelling
69c. The wild boar of Ulimáng	80	98. The woman Ilabangelül from Ngaráus and the destruction of Ngirateĩ (with a chant)	94
70. Catching flying fish		99. The mangrove as the mother of all crabs	95
71. The lost bundle with a corpse inside		100. The long house of Tangregóiaand the place of immortality	96
72a. Trap fishing with only one provision		101 a. The Fish trap of Ngarsúl; Rekevis and Rekebés
72b. The kingfisher as pilot.	81	101 b. The Punished dugong catch	97
73. NgeũlNgartúkūr, Ngartúkūr conquered by the 7 Debásăg		102 a. The broken canoe from Ngardórok
GONGODOGŪL		102 b. The terrible lead singer of Ngardórok
74. Ngirangeáng of Ngartúkūr (with a chant)	82	NGARAMLUNGÚI
75. The fiend of Ilëtemú	83	103. Ngaragárm, the association of birds from Ngare meskáng
76. How Ngira gosisáng took revenge on his wife (with a chant)	84	104. The decline of Ngara meskang (with a chant)
77. How Ngira korángěs helped Melëlem’s wife (with a chant)		105. How a Risesĩl’s wife was helped by her three daughters	98
78. Gárbědul’s inheritance in Ngardmaũ		106. Iluāira iláměs’ good sons	99
79a. Ngabúkěd’s bai-girls in Ngardmaũ	85	107. The betel palm of Ngesisěg
79b. Gólikeklél		108. The thief from Ngesiseg caught with a fishing rod
80a. The poor Mad ra klāĩ and the wealthy Sesilíl (with a chant, see also 208)		109. Ngirai baberóng, the galid spirit of a Ibaberóng	100
80b. The crab of Gamúl	86	110. The fat a Ilúk from Ngadesiúr
81. The good-natured Gululau	87	111. The dispute of the men’s clubs
NGATĚLNGÁL		112. How Gorėđr and a Imeúngs became friends	101
82a. Golél auláol , the patched floor.		113. Garagár and Gělagáng and the destruction of a Uluáng, the money-snake of Rengĩl
82b. Beautiful Měáng from Ngěráir		114. The carefree Ngaremedángěp	103
82c. The galid-spirit woman Bitatúl and her child		115. The acquisition of fire
83. The premna-tree as a shrine		116. The rubak of Ngarbagéd re ngũl
84a. The house of Regósôg in Ngarebőkú ..	88	117. The saved morning bird of Ngarbagéd re ngũl
84b. Rěgósôg in Nggeĩangěl		118. The affectionate cat	104
85a. The lame cripple Kúei in the basket (with a chant)		119. The crocodile of Ngátpang
85b. The ugly Telitěgĩngai, the albino		120a. The boastful spirit of Ngardúbog
86a. Ngarebőkú’s destruction	89	120b. The spondias-tree of Ngátpang
86b. Meregórög bőkú		121a. The bold lover in Ngkebedül	105
87. How Ngardó Lake was created		121b. Krāsus, the deceived lover
88a. Rebábăg from Blissang and the grateful birds		122. Kěáng and Síangělděp
88b. The two blind people	90	123a. The child from Ngátpang
88c. The dissatisfied mongol from Blissang		123b. The false rooster Katiók
88d. The grumpy Blissang-people		124. The corpse stolen in Ngátpang
89. The moray eel of Blissang		125. The snake of Ngadasákěr
90. How the dangerous rats claimed the riaměl -fruits .	92	a IMELĪK
91. The fruit bat Golik re idáp buruogěl		126a. The pangium-tree of Ngadardebotár	106
92a. Gosuláp from Melekéiok		126b. The long vine of Ngadardebotár
92b. The abuse of goats		127a. The toilet on the mountain Klbáiěl
93. The discovery of the triton’s horn		127b. The devil of the mountain Klbáiěl	107
94a. Meloódāũ ra mesikt’s the female director of the Plejades	93	128. The snake of Galěgúi
94b. The origin of white hair		129. The savannah of the pot, Ked ra golakáng, next to Gámliangěl
95a. Damálasói from Ngěrag with the flies		130. Money drifting on a Barringtonia-fruit	108
95b. The man who slept without any limbs.		131. Delákl, who was lamented by the women
96. Rekesiváng’s tree trunk (with a chant)		132. Wrong dugong fishing
		133. The brothers from a Imül	109

134a. Rangatágěl and Rangém	page
134b The clever women of Goikúl	110
135a The mean Gadlulóu
135b Why the bad always sits on top
136a Debedéběk and a Ltalátk = to think and to remember	111
136b. The birds of the gongáiĕr-tree
NGARAGUMĚLBAL.
137. Tur‘re Ngeráod “The bundle of Ngeráod” and Tekíĕlemaláp	112
138. The badly mannered money drillers from Ngeráod	113
139. Ngiragaraměu and Ngiramángés from a Iraĭ .	114
140. Malk ra bések: the poor and the rich rooster
141. Ngisél sogósög: the making of chains to collect eggs
142. Berípěr and Gamárėdóng in the double cave of Goikúl
143. The destruction of Goikúl	115
144. The toeless female thief	116
145. The missed sting ray
146. How the badly treated Matageiaũ took revenge	117
147. Mareáos from Ngėruluóběl
148. The talking head of galid spirit Madatumlógět, of the turtles and of the echo
149a. How the cripple Kelulau was healed	118
149b. The miraculous Dilukaĭ from Ngurusár NGARKLDÉU.
150. Ngartág a béap, the anchorage on the northern side of Gorėör
151. The wounded in behind	119
152. Gokaũ the piece of money from Ngeritáng.
153. How Ngarbagéd got strong because of a Iliúľög	120
154. Blai Ngaragábál in Ngarbagéd
155a. Melogótög a gâu with the long phallus	122
155b The long báog 155c. Adultery in Ngregamaĭ
156. The snake of Ngurukdapěl
157. Gadě gadúg of Ngurukdapěl	123
158. Gamasiógěl in the cave with 2 exits
159a. The cat of a Ulòng	124
159b. The turtle and the goat
160. The moray eel of Dengasík PELÍLIOU.
161. The galid spirit a Guóděl, the destruction of Nagrdolólok, and the mens’ club Ngaratatiróu	125
162. How Ngasiás on Pelíliou got the right to release the new a Ibědul	131
163. How Mad ra skesúk separated from his wife
164. The two-headed galid spirit Măluád ľě gúr in Ngasiás and his drifting stomach
165. Gobak ra mangaláng and the destruction of Ngasiás	132
166a. How poor Mageĭdeuid got wealthy by inventing shrines	134
166b. Explanation on Ngeaur
167. Pěágěd arsaĭ, the monster bird of Ngariáp
168. The four rubak of Ngarakeúkl, who chased the sun	136

169. The female cannibal Dira gamartál	137
170. Golungĭs, the galid spirit with the huge scrotum and his mother a Iluógěl	139
a NGEAŨR.
171a. The broken canoe	141
171b. How the Ngeaur-people tried to get rid of their oppressors	1
172a. The Galid ě gád a Ugér‘rekemúr l gadéng, the shark of Rois	1
172b. Dirarois from Rois and the rooster	142
173a. Catching souls on Ngeaur
173b. Maleitau’s adventure	143
173c. Goděbisěgs adventure 173d. Kalkal’s adventure
c) Stories from overseas.
174. How Dengelei from Sóngosol took revenge for the inconvenience he suffered on Ngeaur
175. The animal of the foreign god	1
176. Trouble Because Of Fire	145
177. The punished thief in Manila
178. The greedy relatives on Yap
179. The two drifted Yapese Nógěmog people.
180a. What happened to the White Alik in Ngaregúr
180b. Captain HOLCOME	146
d) Animal stories.
181. How the crab in the kikói -shell became king. (kmil a kikoi)
182a. The injured carcinus-crab from Galáp
182b. The stranded boxfish
183. The two moray eels in the double stone
184. The race between the needlefish and the hermit crab	147
185. The trees that were friends
186 a. The fishes’fight with the taro
186 b. The crab of Ngaramásăg	148
186 c. How people learn to catch sting rays
187 a. Why the psódög- cardinal fish carries his roe in his mouth 187 b. The turtle and the dukl- trigger fish
188 a. How Gěděád rescued the goroviděl- trevally fish
188b. Hide and seek played by crabs and fish	149
189. The fruit bat and the rat 190. The sharks’ fight
191. The turtle and the megapode
192. The octopus and the búďög-yellow-cheeked tuskfish
e) Heroic chants in its original text with stories.
193. Tallness and the two galid Gad a beděiand Gorsói; story and chant
194. Heroic chant about the destruction of Gurdmău by Gorėör	151
195a. Story of a Ugél‘ľě galid: story of Gorėör	158
195b. Heroic chant	161
196. The singer Golděgól from Nggeiangěl and his chants, with the help of which he assisted to build the landing bridge in Ngarekamais	164

	page		page
197. Story of galid spirit Medegeĩpélau Chant	171	Chant 241. Against the sneezing of foreigners in Ngëramës	220
198. First chant about Ngiragókěbai from a Irai	174	242. Boid on Ardiál
199. Second chant about Ngiragókěbai from a Irai		243. Boid on Uarisáng	221
200. Heroic chant of Ngiraguměráng of Melekéioik	175	244. Boid against taro sickness	222
201. Heroic chant of a Răklăi of Melekéioik	177	245. The emperor’s birthday
202. Story about the Rest (ulengĩl) in the original with translation	178
203. Story with 16 chants of Madlútk from Ngabúkěď, who climbed up to heaven	181
204. Story with 47 chants of the hero with wings Ugélregulsiáng in Mangal’láng	187
205. Heroic chant of Ngirailangaláng in Mangal’láng	198
206. Story and chant about the mongol Mangitíp from Gámliangěł	200
207 a. Story about the revenge of Dirűngűłbai of Ngarekeai	202
207 b. Chant .
208. Duet about Godiu re ngós and his lover (continuation of story 80)	205
209. Chant of Remókět and of his father a Ibědul	206
f) Other chants in its original text translation.
210. Lamentation for insults
211. Chant of Rekói’s chant; Derú besépes	207
212—214. Love chants of Fónovai, Ngirengotél, and Ngirangáruangěł
215. The magic tree Barsrekesau in Ngariáp on Peliliou, and the fullfiller of magic, the galid spirit Sagageiegáng besides his two magic saws	208
216. Love magic	210
217. Magic for popularity	211
218. Removal of magic by vomiting	212
219. Examination if something is under a spell
220. Preservation of strong teeth	213
221. Magic against headache
222. Magic against patchwork	214
223. Magic of relationship
224. Magic against high seas
225. Magic for taro planting	215
g) Chants for Dance and Games.
226. Alternate chants of Ngarěgolúng at the light of the full moon
227. Chant of Ngireklsóng
228. Song at the moonshine game
229. Bai-chant Kerekórd	216
230. Big chant Gelsegésep in the Bai
231. Dance tune Galiták, of Peliliou against Ngeaur
232. Old dance tune about the goroviděl-trevally fish, without translation	217
233. Old dance tune of the galid spirit from Ngeaur, without translation .
234. Dance tune Repetĩ
235. Dance tune Boid	218
236. Dance tune about death
Proverbs	220.
		Section VIII.
		a) Botanical Index	226
		Scientific and English plant names
		Index of orchids	229
		Plants without Palauan names .	230
		b) Zoological index	231
		1. Flying animals	233
		2. Terrestrial animals (snakes, mammals, insects, etc.)	254
		3 Fish, whales, dugong, turtles	256
		Scientific and English names of fish	290
		4. Crabs	291
		5. Mussels and snails	293
		6. Sea cucumbers	295
		7. Inferior animals of the sea	296
		c) Index of the most important Palauan words	296
		Palauan word index	302

A storyboard presented to Augustin and Elisabeth Krämer, showing them at work painting and interviewing Palauans in bai a Dngöróngër. Their dog was added to the carving upon their request.

Foreword.

Only now in the year 1929, after 25 years of work, my treatise on Palau is finished. I considered Palau worthy of such a special effort, not only because of its unique storyboards, but, being a fringe area, it can help solving question of mixed cultures, and thus the question of the origin of cultural units generally. Some insights I contributed in (Vol.) 5b, in the section about cross-cultural studies.

Due to news received from WILLIAM GIBBON I can again, just like in Vol. 3, report some news: In December 1926 a big earthquake occurred; the tremors lasted until August 1927. In this time, from March to May, they were sometimes 12 in one day. One night in August, there was one around 11 o’clock at night, then 2 at midnight, and another one around 1 o’clock in the morning. This caused everyone to wake up and remain awake full of anxiety until morning. Each tremor lasted about 2—3 seconds.

In addition, on May 28, 1927 a typhoon passed over Palau, the second one since my departure in 1910. It started at 8 o’clock in the morning and lasted until 11 o’clock. Peliliou in the south was hit the worst. Everywhere, a lot of houses were flattened, such as the two still existing bai Meketí in Goréor, A and B on the map in Vol. 2. The third one C has been demolished a long time ago, because of a Japanese road construction, when the main road had been straightened. C was placed in place of the dilapidated B. This was also the occasion when it was newly painted. According to WILLIAM’s report, both the collapsed Bai had only been reconstructed on Nov. 28, 1927, the bai G a Dngoróngër only on Dec. 11. Both bai, D a Dmásäg and H Sägāmús, were still on the ground around the turn of the year, just like the canoehouses a Delúi and Sägāmús. In a Imelik the bai Rkeái (A’ Vol. 2) and in a Imeúngs the Gorúkei were reconstructed.

In Vol 1., the damage, caused by the typhoon on Nov. 26, 1912, was already mentioned. The reconstruction of the Bai certainly needed a long time because of the many rotten beams that had broken. This also means that the majority of storyboards might have disappeared on Palau. We cannot even foresee all the old items that have been destroyed by the Japanese cultural policy. The photographs in the Hamburger Illustrierten (magazine), nr. 52 from December 31, 1917, only give a brief impression. I want to remind that the Germans had the intention to transform Palau into a nature reserve, which would have become a unique memorial of the old national traditions.

In Vol. IV I present about 250 stories and chants, of which most are new, as is proven by literature documents. Due to a release on my part, P. HAMBRUCH already published a small portion in his Südseemärchen (South sea stories), with No. 9, 17^a, 18, 137, 140, 141, a. 167. As a matter of fact, there are more than 250, because many of the individual stories proved to be connected and therefore to have been merged; for instance stories 12, 17, 19 etc. Many numbers include, due to technical reasons, 2—4 sub-stories, a—d. In addition, a lot of historical information is included in Vol. 2, where the settlements are mentioned, just like in the index of bai, in Vol. 5.

Considering this quantity of texts, it seemed appropriate to present only short versions, so to say the outline of the story, in order not to use up too much space and not to add to the printing costs. Because of this, we also refrained from a comparison of the Palauan texts, particularly because we presented already some original texts for linguists in Vol. 3. The chants and songs were of course an exception. If individual words are written differently there, than in the preceding volumes, for instance Bēlau and Pēlau instead of Palau, kelulau and kalulau, etc., then this was done on purpose, because the transcript of the poetic forms was attempted in the same fashion as my ear had heard it. The storytellers are rarely mentioned, because often there were several, who told a story. In addition, a name does not mean much, and as shown by the matrilineal layouts, the homeland of an individual person is often quite arguable.

Concerning Goréor I owe a lot to the title-rubak Ibēdul I, Ngiraikelāu II and Rekesivang VIII. Fig. 1 shows how Ngiraikelāu told the stories and WILLIAM translated them. The tireless WILLIAM GIBBON was often put to an acid test, when I kept on asking many, seemingly insignificant questions. I still remember a day, when I had heard story nr. 14 in Goréör, and wanted to hear more about the fishwife. Suddenly it was too much for him, and he angrily burst out warning me in a fatherly fashion: You must not believe in such nonsense; it is only a history! E. KRÄMER was just as tireless to paint the logukl in watercolors, just like Miss EMMA MAYER in Hamburg, who worked for their reproduction in print. Evidence of the realistic reproduction can be found in Vol.. 5. The color plates and the double plates in Vol. 5 show only a small portion of the material, though still enough to give an impression of the opulence of decoration. How much existed can best be seen in the bai-index in Vol. 5, which shows the most important ones. The photographic plates were created from my own photographs.

I am much obliged to the Notgemeinschaft der deutschen Wissenschaft, which made the publication of the Vol. 4 and 5 possible.

Stuttgart, April 5, 1929.

AUGUSTIN KRÄMER

²Whatever I did not hear myself during the field research, thus, which is from other authors, has always been cited.

Cordilyne flower with gecko. Glass plate scan, Hamburg Museum.

Glass plate scan, hamburg Museum.

Section VII. Stories And Chants.

Wherever a story is entirely or partially represented in a bai as logukl (log), then this information is added underneath the title of the story. An index of bai and of the storyboards (log.) represented on and in it can be found in the following Vol. 5. bai 89 V^b means: bai nr. 89, tie beam (a imül) V., back (but = b)- side or front side = a (madál); thus, everyone can see where and how often a story has been depicted. As already mentioned, most of the old bai have been destroyed by the typhoon or they have collapsed, therefore, the reproductions in Vol. 5, drawn or painted in watercolors in every detail by E. K. (double plates = d.-pl.) 1—35 a. pl. I, or we photographed them, or made a frottage, represent the last remnant of a vanished culture.

Story 1. The Creation Of The Spirits of the Land.

log. in bai 89 V^b, bai 93 VI, bai 105 V^a, (bai 126 V^{a?}).

In the oldest days there was no land and people did not exist, only a volcanic rock, the risóis, rose out of the sea. Galid spirit Tpereákl ¹ and the woman Latmikaík originated from it; he went to heaven, from where he often came down, and she lived at the bottom of the sea. In due course she created numerous fish and the first human beings arúgel. First she gave birth to two sons, a Ugéliángěd and a Ugéldátk ², then two girls. In addition many sons and female creatures in the form of fish were born. The first two sons married the two girls and the other man the fish-women.

Now the long fish, the eels and rays etc., started to build a house ³ for the couples, while the other fish fetched stones from the bottom of the sea and piled them up, until an island appeared above the surface of the sea; this is today's Ngeaur. The galid spirit piled up more and more, until a high tower made from sand and stone was created; he had the form of a human being and was called a Guáp. When the giant had been completed, they started a fire at his feet so that he toppled over. The debris created the Gogeál-islands and the Pélau-land. The galid spirit spread all over Palau. There still existed no sun.

Story 2. The Giant a Guáp And The Creation Of Palau.

log. bai 33 VIII. d-pl. 1^a, bai 100 I; not sure if this is a Guáp, because he is accompanied by money bai 114 VII^b, like A-B Meyer '81 pl. 5, row 7.

Soon after the creation, a giant grew up in the house Ngatělkou ⁴ on a Ngeaur. He was called a Guáp and ate so much that the inhabitants were threatened by famine. After his birth he grew so rapidly that repeatedly a new and bigger house had to be built for him, because his head kept growing through the roof. Finally he became so tall, that nobody could see his head anymore. His size as well as his ravenous appetite made a Ugel pelau, the high chief of a Ngeaur, come to the decision to kill the giant. He ordered his people to pile firewood around the feet of the monster and then lit it. Soon the giant collapsed and fell towards the north, destroying the piled up coral stones; this created the Gogeál ⁵. His body remained lying where it was and became today's island Babldáob: The head is the peninsula of Ngaregolóng, which initially had been separated from the body; his back is the eastern side, the buttocks are a Iraĩ, and his legs, pulled up in his pain, became the landscape of a Imelík.

¹ the many seas running in front of the surf are called peréakl. a Ugéliángěd "the first one in heaven", a Ugéldátk "the first one of the nether-world". The descendants of Latmikaík was so numerous, that even today, when many people arrive, one after the other, people say: ngórogo-magéla Latmikaík "just like the giver of life Latmikaík".

² The name appears later also for Ngiraidemai in Ngabiúl (see Vol. 2, p. 27 and story 3); datk s. Bai 133 E.

³ This house is mentioned in story 193.

⁴ According to another version the Gogeál supposedly are his waste, which he left underneath himself while dying.

⁵ Kub. II p. 122 of Ngardmau

Story 3. The Descendants Of Mlagél Latmikáik And Their Creations. Wealth And Poverty.

With the exception of a Ugéliangĕd, also called a Ugéllĕgalíd, and of a Ugéldákt, later on of Ngiraidemái¹ from Ngaramásăg on Ngeaur, on the last place the following galid spirit were still their descendants: a Ugél pebâĕl, called after the pebâĕl-rabbit fish like a Ugéla gái and a Ugel kemúl’l gadéng² named after the shellfish and the tail of the shark. Further on, we have to mention here the demigod, galidĕgád Golungīs and Ngirauluóng³ from Ngarapelau. On Pelilioŭ there are galid spirit Gereómĕl from Pkulapelú and a Guódĕl from Ngardolólók; on Ngarekobasáng it is Ugélkóbasádĕl, on Gorĕör it is Ugélkldĕu.

Two brothers, ”wealth” a Siĕg and Galebŭl ”poverty” went to the north, to Ngaregolóng; a Siĕg went to the western side Keúklgolóng, to Gólei, where he cleaned the place. He also went to a Ukál, in order to plan a village there, while Galebŭl went to Ngabiúl, in order to construct a settlement there. Then he went via a Gól and Ngabúkĕd to Ngaradermáng nearby a Ulimáng. However, Siĕg followed the western coast down to Ngaragatáng in Ngardmaŭ, then to a Imelĭk, where he remained and died. Finally Galebŭl went from Ngaradermáng further on to Melekéiok and, after he had attended Siĕg’s funeral, he continued to Gorĕör, where he, too, got sick and died. He was buried on the mountain Túkŭr nearby Ngarekesauáol, while Ugél kldĕu is buried nearby Gongmĭl in the east.

Story 4a. The Magic of Coming Together (gomsaubúkl).

log. Bai 22 IV^b d.-pl. 1^b, Bai 26 VI^a, Bai 33 III^a, Bai 36 II^a, Bai 40 II^a, Bai 55 eastern gable plate IV^a, Bai 161 br; see also A.B. MEYER’ 81, plate 3, 1 row.

The creation of the land and of the spirits had been completed, but still there was no sun. One tall palm tree grew on Ngeaur and on Nggeiangĕl and on each one of the two islands lived a galidĕgád, a demigod. Each one of them made his magic, called gólei, for the purpose of *gomsaubúkl*⁴, ”the get together”. They wanted to talk to each other, to chat. The magic worked well, so that the two palm trees bent towards each other, and they both rode along the palm tree trunk until they met. The magic words are the following (also to shorten work or other things):

ke rekós pedagalá ⁵ ra ngerĕm ĕ Ilemál	You fulfill your command, a Ilemáng,
meskók tial pedógel	give me this fulfillment,
loragadĕl ⁶ a klóel ⁷	accelerate the work in the taro patch,
mak urĕged, r tial klóel rĕ gĕlagá lĕ gĕós.	and I work faster today
ĕSagageigá ⁸ mekebedógel	Sagageiegáng fulfills it,
ĕ ke kloleklél ⁹ Tmerégĕd mé Tmekílt	You are my son, quick and
me Tmerekóng ¹⁰ !	fast and get things done.

Story 4b. Sumĕs from Nggeiangĕl and Gogádu from a Ngeaur.

log. bai 90 II^a, illust. II in Vol. 5.

Once upon a time, Sumĕs the ”taro-fork” and Gogádu the “fire-tongs” were looking for each other, yet they always missed each other. Sumĕs came to a Ngeaur and Gogádu came to Nggeiangĕl. However, they could not meet each other.

¹ see story 1.

² a is more correctly written a Uger’re kemur lgadéng and Ugér’ re kemúr lgái (see story 172^a a. Bai 135 IV.)

³ Ngirailuóng from Golei.

⁴ More about it in story17^a about Tipĕtipakmiĕg, where a special chant is also mentioned (p. 48).

⁵ pedógel to fulfill, see these constantly repeated words in story 215 and the following (WALL.: bedóchel strong, effective).

⁶ from oregĕd to accelerate.

⁷ from mesál to excavate, to plug away the marl in the taro patch.

⁸ The fulfiller of the magic, see Ngariáp on Pelilioŭ

⁹ for klóklél his thing, poss. of klálo.

¹⁰ thought to be 3 galid spirit; mekílt = merégĕd quick.

Once they came upon each other on the island Ngaregebál without recognizing each other. Sumĕs asked: where are you going to? Godágu replied: I am looking for Sumĕs! Only then they recognized each other, they ate together, told each other their news, and were content.

Story 5. The House With The Stone Pillars.

log. bai 14 V^b, bai 97 w.

When the galid¹ spirit wanted to settle in Ngaregolóng, they brought parts of the house, made of stone, on rafts, yet lost most of them on the way. Thus, one pillar is located at the Pkulatáp rivál, where it can still be seen. North of Galáp they lost the roof, today this is a big stretch of sand. Finally only a few house posts arrived in this fashion in Ngaregolóng, where the galid spirit started to construct a stone house, the Bairemegau². Yet, Galid spirit Iegádrengél did not want human beings to know about stone houses, therefore he created the sun, because galid spirit cannot work during daylight hours. They had to stop their work and turned into stone.

Story 6. Jegád re ngél, The Maker Of The Sun And Gogit, The Man In The Moon.

log. bai 12 VI^b, bai 62 II^b and bai 87 VII^b Illustr.d. pl. 1^c, bai 93 II^a, bai 100 w., bai 142 IV^a.

Jegád re ngél lived on the land Ngarenégl in a Imelĭk³. One day Sagamidár from Mekér told his boys to fetch lianas to plait some fish baskets. They went by canoe to the nearby island Gokerdŭl. While some of the boys went to the forest, one remained in the canoe in order to guard it. A strange boy joined him. He said his name was Gogit, his mother was a bakái- a megapode and he lived with her in the forest. The two boys played together. However, when the other boys returned, the foreign boy suddenly disappeared. Back at home the boy told his father about this adventure. The old man asked: Why haven’t you brought him along?

— When the boy could not come up with an answer, his father sent him back with the assignment to fetch his friend. When the two had met again, and the message was delivered, Gogit replied that he first had to ask his mother. This one said: Go and stay as long as you like, just come back from time to time. — So Gogit came into the house of Sagarmidár, where he was well received and got a lot to eat. After some time, when he wanted to visit his mother, the old man told him: Go to your mother and tell her, you should stay here with me. — The boy did so and reported how well he lived there. Therefore, his mother answered: Do so, we are quite poor here and only have berries and miserable food to eat!

— Thus until he was 15 years old, Gogit lived free and without any worries in the house of Sagarmidár. Then he began to cut palm-juice for his master. He started to build a cooking house, where he boiled it. Since the house had only a floor covering half of the house, his mother, who by now visited him in the evenings, started to make a heap of leaves on the other side.

One day, Sagarmidár asked him: You are always making palm-juice! What happened to your mother? Is she dead? Every night around midnight he heard some noise in the cooking house. Gogit replied: She is not dead, but I am ashamed. So she always comes to visit me at night, since my mother is a megapode — Sagarmidár, though, spoke: Do not feel ashamed. I want to see her! — Gogit said: Come this night then you can see her!

¹ They seem to be the ones from the depth of Makáep, story 13; the god of the land Delangerík (Vol. 2, p.12) also belongs to them.

² Even today the rubak-bai of Ngaremegau in Ngival is called like this. In Ngĕungĕl and Ngarametóng (Ngaregolóng) the no longer existing galid spirit houses were called Ngruĕlēgau. In this last place, even today the stone pillars of a former Galid bai are still there. Yet, the one mentioned in the legend was situated more towards the east of Ngarametúkĕr on the eastern acclivity, where in former times Delbóng was situated. Today, basalt columns are still lying around nearby the hill Delóbog, they are also called Ngaruĕlēgau (Bairuelēgau).

³ see story 7, Vol. 1.

— When the mother arrived at night, she remained outside and said that she soon had to leave again. But her son called to her: My father wants to see you, come inside! — Then she came inside and jumped down on the ground. Sagarmidár said: Is she the one? — Gogit answered: Yes, this is her! — now the father asked the bakāi -hen: Would you like to live with us? — She said: —No, this I cannot do; I have to live in the bush, I am used to this. — After that she left. Gogit filled again the pots with syrup; Sagarmidár sold them and filled his baskets with money.

One day Rubak I from Ngurusár (see story 147), Tugërémél agónged-feast. All his daughters were married to wealthy men, only his sister, a Tkús, had a poor husband. He told her, ”You live with my daughters, who all give me money for the feast; only you are poor and give me nothing. You should go to the cooking house and prepare taro!” The woman cried, chased her husband away, carried her basket and her belongings into the cooking house, and remained there three days. On the forth day she left, wandering over land to Mekér. At sundown she entered Gogit’s cooking house, while he was out to cut palm wine.

She was good looking; she lit a fire, placed the pots on it and waited until he came home. At nighttime he returned, at the same time as his mother. When he saw the strange woman he barked at her, “What are you doing here? How come you lit a fire here? a Tkús replied: I am the sister of Tugërémél; he is organizing a gónged-feast and I am poorly married. Three days ago I chased away my husband and then I heard about you, that you are rich. Thus, I came here. I want to satisfy my brother. Help me! If you do this for me, I will be yours, leaving all relatives I will follow you. — Gogit asked: When is the feast supposed to take place? — and a Tkús replied: After tomorrow we will go to Ngurusár. — At night Gogit told his mother everything, who had again left for the bush: After tomorrow is tiakl-payday in Ngurusár; we want to go there. The mother said: — Tomorrow night I will come and we will talk about it. You can go! — The following night the bakāi -hen came to her heap of leaves and dug in it for the money that she had incubated there. She filled a basket with it and gave it to her son with the following words: — Tell nobody about it, but tomorrow you will tell Sagarmidár that you are going to Ngurusár. —

In the morning, when they were ready to leave, Gogit told Sagarmidár. This one gave him one galebúgëp and one kluk. Silently Gogit thought: I worked so much for him and he gives me so little. — Then they left.

When they reached Ngurusár and Tugërémél saw them, he shouted: Open the middle door! Because he was so pleased to see his sister again. Yet, Gogit did not want to enter the house, together with a Tkús he sat down outside on the gólbed-pavement. He sent a man to Tugërémél, that he should call together the fishermen (rúnged) providing for the feast and the oldest members of the family (rukdemáol). When these had arrived and were seated in rows in front of the house, on one side the fishermen and on the other the elders a Tkús said to her brother: Send also for your sons-in-law, they should be the first ones to present their money. They came but each one of them paid only one kluk. Then a Tkús spoke to her brother: I am your only sister, since their money donations are so small I will give you my bus-marriage-money and in addition I will pay for the other expenses. You treat your children better than me, and now they give you so little and I give you so much!

When the bus had been paid, Tugërémél gave everything to the family elders as gongadëding ”anesthetic”. When he had done so a Tkús called for a man who should publicly announce the money. She paid the fishermen 7 galebúgëp and in addition the 2 leaders 2 kluk for their small gamágël-chew (since the leaders cannot chew so much betelnut, therefore, they have to be rewarded). When this was accomplished, she asked the fishermen: komerekóng? (Are you satisfied?) They confirmed this and left.

Now Tugërémél called both of them into the house. His sister looked satisfied, but his daughters looked ashamed. In the house a Tkús saw her child by her former husband and she said to her brother: I cannot leave Gogit any more, because he makes me happy. Instead of me, you take care of my child. Maybe I will not come back! — Afterwards Gogit heard Sagarmidár say: Gogit smells like the bush! —

When both of them had returned to Mekér, just like before Gogit continued to cut palm juice for Sagarmidár and a Tkús lived with him in the cooking house. One day, on his way back from cutting the palm trees, Gogit passed the village-house in Ngarekeāi, where the rubak celebrated a feast. He heard his father say that the fat dorsal fin of the mámël-fish should be brought to his son Gogit. When the piece of fish was brought to the compound of Sagarmidár, his children ate it all and only left a piece of shark that had been sent along for Gogit. When he saw this, he felt angry because he had heard that the good piece was supposed to be his. He had the feeling that he was not treated like a real son. He went to his mother and told her about his anger. He said he wanted to leave with his wife. His mother told him: Good! Me too, I will no longer incubate money, but only lay eggs and they will produce nothing more than small birds. Let me live the way I do, but you look for a better place.

Thus, Gogit and a Tkús left and went north. When they reached the savanna Pkurengél, they heard somebody working with an adze. They followed the noise and found Jegárengél working on the plot of land called Ngarengél. He was just about to carve the moon from the wood of the plagéos-tree. He had already finished the sun¹, he had thrown it into the ocean, and it had left. He also had sent along three galid spirit to help rolling the sun wheel across the sky. While he was still working on the moon, Gogit asked: When you throw this into the water where will it go? — Jegárengél replied: It is going wherever it wants! — Gogit had another question: May I accompany it? — The master replied: Good! —

When the moon was finished, they placed it on top of the water and Gogit entered it together with his wife. Jegárengél said: If you go now with the moon, do not get angry at me, later on because it does not come back. We will see each other, but we cannot come together again.² — Therefore, people still see today Gogit and a Tkús in the moon. Jegárengél transformed himself into a stone, which, even today can still be seen on Pkurengél. The following story, about the creation of the sexes, reports how Jegád went into the sun and, therefore, can be considered to be the sun god.

Story 7. Jegád re ngél The Creator And His Sister Magád re ngădăsákěr³.

log. bai 7 II^a, bai 8 V^b illustr. d.-pl. I^d, bai 12 IV^b, bai 93 II^b, bai 142 IV^a.

In Ngarsúl, Magád re ngădăsáker, the sister of Jegád re ngél, created vuk ⁴, while he built kirs ⁵ in Pkurengél. It was night. He sent her a message to bring her things to him, but she replied: No! My things are not going behind his, but his things go behind mine. — When the messenger reported this, he went by canoe with his kirs to Ngarsul. When he came on shore, Magád had placed her vúk behind her house and had covered them with leaves.

¹ see story 5; see also the gërabái, Vol 4, illustr. 5a.

²This refers to the course of the moon, which is separated from the one of the sun, with which the god puts himself together! According to Kub. V, p. 56, the sister - the moon - was created at the same time, and was supposed to travel together with the sun. Yet, she was pleasure seeking and came late, this is the reason that the nights are dedicated to pleasure.

³Ngădăsaker supposedly is a section of the savanna nearby Ngarsúl, see village 35 of district V and story 125 about the Bersóiog.

⁴ vuk the female, kirs the male private part.

When Jegád approached her with his bundle, a certain agitation stirred within the vuk and also in the kirs. They hurried towards the vuk and united with them. Magád wanted to drive away the kirs, but she could not manage. Those pairs, which ran up the mountain, became the chiefly families a Udēs and a Idíd, etc. The rest became the common people. Afterwards, Jegád created the sun and the moon and later on went himself into the sun. According to some other information Jegád formed the human beings from soil and then breathed on them. This is supposedly reported in a chant from Ngeaur, but I was not able to obtain it.

Explanatory Note.

Concerning the creation legend KUB. I reports the following:

- (p. 44) ”In the beginning Palau was dark and uninhabited and situated on a rock, which to this day has the name Royoß a bujul and which is situated on the western tip of Ej melijk (see Rois búiel Vol. 1.) lived the spirit Irakaderngel with his wife Eiluaj ngadassakor. These two carved the sun and the moon with a shell adze, threw them into the air and daylight was created.”
- (p. 45) ”there still were no human beings. The Kalit-couple now created people, the man was shaped the men and the woman was shaping the women. When they were about to make the parts, which differentiate men and women, it happened that Ajkaderngel wanted to see his wife’s creation, while readily showing her his work. The woman, however, became angry (makroß) and quickly hid the part. From this time onwards all woman wear the Karyut, an apron made of Pandanus leaves, while the men walk around stark naked.”
- (p. 45) ”A legend about the moon tells about a man with the name Aremesej and his wife Atkuk, who both were fed up with Palau. They went on top of the rock Royoß a bujul in Eimelijk, from where they originated and they called on the moon. When the moon came closer, they stepped on the neck of a snake and thus reached the moon, where they still live today and in which they can be seen in each moonlit night. On the moon there is only one orange tree, from which they live.”

The same legend can be found in KUB. V p. 58, only the names are Arameséy and Aðkuðk, besides there is another version, where a woman playing with a child in the moonshine shouted: ”Come and take your child”. When the moon came, she asked it to wait, until her husband would be back from fishing. When he had returned, all the three of them went into the moon.

KUB. V., p. 55 reports the first time like this:

People lived already in Palau at the time when it was still completely dark, and actually the ones on Angyaur were very wild and supposedly were very hairy, they had strong Keresupsup-hair on the head. People living in the north were supposed to be completely different from them and above all they had been created on the spot where they lived. The siblings Irakadjerngel and Eluay ¹ Ngadasáker are attributed with their creation. Both of them lived in Eimeliik on Baobeldaob, in the area of the headland Ngel (therefore the name kad er ngel, human being from Ngel). They formed human beings from earth and the blood of different animals. The mother of the creating couple was a snake, they themselves, however, were asexual, neither man nor woman, just like the people they had created. Subsequently the human beings did not like to live like this and the two creators shaped the genitals. It happened that the sister covered her work with leaves and denied her guileless, curios brother a glimpse.

¹ Elsewhere there is another a Iluaireng magád, so that this one and the former name Magád . . . are united here, as the one for women, like iegád is used for men

They fitted the parts onto the human beings and created marriage by placing each couple together, yet many of the couples fell apart. Therefore, the human race, in all its characteristics, shows traces of these first circumstances. Women are demure and carefully cover their private parts, while men can walk around stark naked without any scandal. Most marriages seldom last very long and separation is easy and customary, until the right halves have found each other. However, depending on their ancestry from the blood of the rat, the snake, the rooster, etc. human beings will be thieving, sneaking, courageous, etc.

In KUB. V., p. 3 the following is written: A legend is the key to the present-day Palauan notion of the psychological characteristics of human beings. Accordingly, the clay used (by Irakaderngel) to create the first human beings was mixed with the blood of different animals; therefore, people exhibit today the qualities of such animals in their character.

Story 8. The Immigration Of Galid Spirit a Ugélkeklau From The East.

log. bai 49 N., bai 55 VI d.-pl. 1f, bai 105 III^b illustr. pl. XIV 19; hair-flyer: bai 2 V^a, bai 59 IV^b d.-pl. 1e, bai 99 VII^b, bai 128 VIII d.-pl. 1f; end Mógēmog: bai 15 VI^b illustr. pl. XIV 20, bai 63 S., bai 78 VI^b illustr., bai 138 II^b pl. XI^a and VII^a illustr.

a Ugelkelau came from Matáng rengos ¹ in the east. Lalekuór was a famous female pirate, who raided the seas around Pónape. She and her daughter a Lalamóng as well as many others, too, traveled with him westward. First they came to Ngeri ² on Yap and then they reached Pélau. During the journey they passed the time playing cat’s cradle³. People from Yap accompanied them. Initially, they landed at a Ngeaur ⁴, where they stayed for a long time; they stayed in Ngaběängëd. Ugélagadéng the “master of sharks” also lived there. He ordered the strangers to catch some shark for his feast (see story 172). At night, they twisted a rope, which was very strong for a shark, Ugélagadéng, however, told them it was too weak. They tried nevertheless and went out to sea. Now Ugélagadéng turned into a shark, bit through their line, and carried it to shore, where he hung it on a Dracaena (orredakl).

The foreigners still caught some small sharks and brought them to the galid spirit, who was rather angry about the meager catch. The fishermen found the dripping wet rope that had been bitten through, hanging at the Dracaena (orredakl); but they were afraid to talk about it with the galid spirit. Therefore, they left Ngeaur, leaving behind one girl, in exchange they took a Palauan woman along.

They moved to Pelíliou, to Rois siá, the mountain of Ngasiás, where previously a village was situated. Their ruk-dance delighted the woman of this settlement so much that they sent them a blolóbol. — Then they crossed over to Ngardolólok that they slowly populated. Ugélagadéng had followed them there. Since they wanted to be rid of him, yet he did not want to let them go. Therefore, they gave him the name a Guóděł and moved on. To his great satisfaction they left some of their people behind. In this way, Ngardolólok was left so vacant, that people from the nearby island Ngarekersául⁵ had to move there, in order to help the village.

¹ matáng ”forked”, gongós “east” (see story 10). The name Keklau supposedly was also brought from there, and it probably means “people from adjaú”, see Keklau: Vol. 2. When suddenly 5—6 men died because of god Ugélmadál, the shark, they emigrated. When people from Keklau come to Ngardolólok, they blow the conch shell beforehand because, should they encounter children with golbiúngěł-necklaces, they have the right to take them away, as they belong to the same tribe because of the ones who had stayed behind

² even today a long taro field nearby Ulimáng has this name.

³ galiděbáol cat’s cradle, the “passing on”; compare with the rock in Gólēi, Vol. 3.

⁴ The word is also Central Carolinian, see district X. Vol. 2..

⁵ belonging to Ngardolólok, it seems that this is Ngargersiul.

On their way north, they first went on shore on the limestone rock of Nguruktúkdápêl and founded the settlement Goikúl. Later on, the place was named Nguruktúkêruikúl¹. Some of them stayed here, the rest moved on to Ngarenggól², whereto they brought the title Ugél‘lê galíd.

In those days the village Goréör was very poor and was suppressed by Ngarekobasáng ³. The reef-people of a Ugélpelú helped the people from Goréör and the foreigners supported them. Some of them turned towards Ulábágád ⁴, between Ngatkip and Ngarsúng, or to Tuápêl ⁵ nearby Ngurusár, in order to help this place against Ngarmíd. Here, they tied their hair together, attached a feather and let it fly to Ngarmíd (ngam gogúi). As the feather constantly turned in the air, the women of Ngarmíd called the local entrance there Pipirói. Curiously they followed the line made of human hair and arrived in Tuápêl, where they became the mongol of the foreigners⁶. Now, these sent a messenger to Ngarenggól, his order was to attack on the following morning the settlement Ngarmíd from the south.

They stayed for a while on the island Ngamólei nearby a Imeúngs, there they received also a delivery of women (úlög) from Ngêrutêgei. Here too, they let a feather fly, which floated to Ngêluóng, the channel of a Imeúngs. Despite this, they continued to a Ugêráel in Ngardmau, where they danced on the canoes, in return Ngatpúiêg ⁷ provided some women, and they moved on to Gurdmau in order to found in its vicinity the settlement Gomelátêgmólög.

From here they once again dispersed in several parts ⁸. Some people went overland to Ulengêrêval‘l nearby a Gól, others to Ngêúngêl, where the 10 Gádlbai-titles were created. Still others moved from there overland to Ngrîl. However, the majority sailed to the island Ngarekeklau at the northern tip of Babeldáób, where they settled, build a stone bridge, etc. Since the number of inhabitants rose, they had to get food from Ngatmél and Gólei.

They would do the same from the north, in order to free the village Goréör of its oppressors. Thus, Ngarmíd was destroyed, and the women remaining there were handed over to the Ngêruluóbêl. Now, the unsatisfied ones travelled further up the west coast to Makáep ⁹ in a Imelîk, then to Tuágêl mlungúi, where they attempted to establish a settlement on the reef, yet the strong tides and a flood washed away the stone walls and killed many.

During the journey a Ugélkeklau was always accompanied by a rooster ¹⁰; he also introduced the kesókês-fishing technique to his new residence, and in this way the settlers got their fish ¹¹. The settlement Ngarekeklau ¹² prospered, it was rich and powerful. One day, Gêsêbei, rubak I from Galáp, sailed with his wife to Ngeiangêl; a Ugélkeklau went also there and seduced the woman. When Gêsêbei heard this he collected people from area of Ngregolóng and destroyed Ngarekeklau, whose inhabitants emigrated to the south.

¹ metúker = “bay”

² At the exit of the Malágal-harbor, in the north, the beach looking to the east.

³ see the story 195 of a Ugélpelú

⁴ also pronounced Ulábágád.

⁵ The small island is so close by Ngurusár that in the interior of the channel the canoes could be heavily loaded.

⁶ log. d.-pl. 1^e, see Bai 59 IV b; mixed this legend with the Bai of story 11.

⁷ Ngatpúiêg and Gurdmau are village parts of Ngardmau.

⁸ A part of the Ngardolólók–people came later (see KUB. II, p. 117) via Nggêsár to Ngêbúrêg nearby Melekéiok.

⁹ between Ngardebotár and Medórom, inside of the island Ngeîl.

¹⁰ Compare story 11 about Boi, in particular regarding the rooster; illustration of the kesókês Bai 105 III^b.

¹¹ see story 60.

¹² The story about Ngarakeklau see story 9.

While doing this the following happened: The woman Baulngasúr had given birth to a child. She sailed on board of the canoe of Ugélkeklau. When they passed the beach of Ngaramedei, where in former times the channel Makêáld had been situated, the high ranking woman Gourót from blai ra kî, therefore, called Gourót ra kí, was taking a hot medicinal bath ¹, because she had just given birth. When Gourót saw the woman Baul with her newborn baby, she shouted: I am lucky, just now I have also given birth to a child. Give me your child and we will be relatives. — a Ugél, however, demanded that she first ask permission from her younger brother a Iderêbau and when this one consented Ugél said: Good; and because you have taken a hot bath here, this place shall be called Makêáld.

Later, they sailed on, passing today’s Keklau, looking ashore from berípêr Garigül, then further on to Ngará mēgau in Ngivál, where they settled. Rubak I a Guóng of Ngaragêlūk, from the other side of Ngivál, saw that the new arrivals had very little food and, therefore, offered them some coconuts in exchange for their Yapese women. Yet, Ugélkeklau refused; on the contrary he wanted some additional women from them, because his entourage supposedly counted many thousand men. Thus, one evening when it was already dark, he went out and made the birds howl and sing ². Shocked, the people from Ngivál ran away. Thus, he took his úlög-women’s tribute of Ngaregêlūk to the ked Meregórögbökú ³ and then sailed to Keklau, where he took possession of the land Ngamēau.

He made his people go on shore, after they had driven away the people from Kélebis, today’s Joul pelú. There he placed a Lalamóng, the daughter of Lalekuór, who had come with him from the east, into the house a Lukêláp ⁴, while Ugél himself took blai Ngaruêlêu and Garingói. Then he brought people from Ngeau to Medórom, Ngátmadei and Ngaremásäg, the ones from Pelíliou to the mountain Gámliangêl, the ones on the island Ngemelís to Nggamaséd, the ones from Ngêregóng, Pelúgoár and Magaragárd to Ngaregamaî, the ones from Metúkêr uikul to Goikúl. Now, a Lalamáng gave birth to Gátu “the cat” and Mangerengér “the sea snake”. However, she did not enjoy the education of these two children, because they ate a lot and did not want to work at all. When all her efforts failed, she treated the two so badly that they ran away.

Reaching the landing place a Imetêrtórög, Mangerengér said to Gatu, “Sit on my head”. The cat did so, and the sea snake swam away with it to Uêkeüíd ⁵. When they arrived, it was low tide. Mangerengér placed itself in the form of a fish trap, in order to catch fish for both of them. When many of them had gathered within its coils and caused the surface to become agitated, Ngira dedemaü on the plot of land called Rokiei, noticed this. He ran outside and saw the sea snake catching fish with its posture. This one called to him: I am thirsty; turn around and bring me a young coconut, afterwards you can have as many fish as you like!

— Rokiei did as he was ordered and brought a whole bunch of nuts. One of them he split and placed one half under the head of the snake, one he gave her to drink. Then he caught many fish and noticed how the mangerengér had accomplished this, discovering thereby the design of a weir, a peng, which he also introduced to the Yapese and the Pelauans.

¹ the beach is between Ngêsáng and Ulimáng. Another informant said, that, after having given birth, Gourót came to the beach in order to clean herself. There she met the woman a Iderbau, the sister of a Ulonggóng, who had also just given birth and offered her warm water to clean herself.

² mesurög more about it in Vol. 3 ulongkūk “to sing in howling sounds” to whine.

³ see story 86b.

⁴ Central Carolinian name.

⁵ This means Mógemog; the word is tantamount to the “70 islands” Ngarekeuid.

Therefore even today, when constructing a weir, people still place six coconut halves at certain locations of the trap, at the same time they are calling on Rokiē and Mangerengér and many fishermen. Mangerengér had ordered Rokiē to carry the cat on shore and to take care of her. In this fashion she became the mother of all the following cats. By the way fishing baskets supposedly came from Mógēmog. Sorau, the god of the sea, supposedly was their creator (s. log. 30^d on plate 1f).

Story 9. How Money Came To Palau.

The Money-Island Ngorót¹ (sequel to 8).

log.: bai 6 II^b illustr., bai 11 IX^b, bai 29 IV^b, bai 48 n. a. S., illustr. pl. II^c a. d., a. Vol. 5 illustr. 6 and n., bai 60 E. illustr. KUB. VIII pl. 45, bai 65 VIII, bai 70 VI^a, bai 73 I, bai 75 IV^a, 84 III^b, bai 96 w. illustr. Vol. 5 illustr. 12, bai 117 w. illustr., bai 133 w. pl. X^b, bai 137 X^a, bai 139 V^a pl. XI^b; from blai Ngatēlkóu: bai 29 IV^a d.-pl. 2^a; about the curlew on Ngarekeklāu: bai 11 II^a, bai 34 II^a illustr., bai 46 III^b d.-pl. 2^b, bai 82 E., bai 108 III^b d.-pl. 2^c a. pl. XIV 10, bai 119 d.-pl. 2^c. End of a Rdegor’s journey: bai 6 II^b illustr., bai 65 VIII, bai 121 IV^a.

Once upon a time, a canoe from Ngarekeklāu ² went fishing on the reef Kiúiēd, that got its name from the Micronesian Starling-bird, which visited the canoe. When the fishermen took their fishing basket they found a dead mirogórog ³-spotted hawkfish inside, which they placed on the outrigger. Then a kiúiēd-starling ⁴ flew there and picked some eggs from the body of the fish; then he flew to the island Ngarekeklāu. There, in front of the house of a Ugélkeklāu, stood a tree ⁵ with a big crutch in the notch, in which water had accumulated. The starling drank from it and a little bit of the rye fell into the water. A fish hatched from it. When the chief sent his son up the tree to fetch some betel-leaves from the entwining pepper-plant, this one found the small fish, fetched it with a coconut shell and brought it down.

It began to grow so that soon a wooden bowl had to be used instead of the shell. But soon this one, too, no longer sufficed so that the fish, it was a female, was placed into the bathing pond. Since it also grew there rather quickly, the people of the village were afraid and complained about its presence in the bathing pond. Now the boy had to put it into the sea, actually into a hole in the channel Tēru lekebil in Ngatmél ⁶. However, there too, it grew to such a size that canoes no longer could enter through the reef entrance. Since its caretaker had to feed it and because the monster ate so much, it soon caused a famine on Ngarekeklāu. Consequently, a Ugélkaklāu decided to bring the fish to Ngeaur.

At first it came to the reef entrance Ngid and devoured a man who was fishing there. Then a Ugélkeklāu took a branch from a Dracaena (orredakl) and made some magic, so that the fish escaped in the direction of the Metéu-entrance in the Ngamai Bay.

Fig.2. The rings are the 6 halves of coconuts, which are placed down when a fish trap is officially opened.

¹ KUB. I, p. 49 Ngrogot; here the legend has already been mentioned. Meanwhile my manifold chronicles (1907 and 1910) bring a lot of new information and all in another light, so that I present my account complete with the necessary footnotes from KUBARY’s descriptions.

² others say people came from Gólei and went to the island Ngaregúr (nearby Ngarekeklāu) in order to eat the fish there; in doing so they forgot one in the canoe, when they had reached home.

³ a young tēmakaī grouper, Serranus albofascus.

⁴ according to some other information a deróiōg (little pied cormorant) bird.

⁵ according to KUB. a bars. The bird came from Ngurusár, it supposedly had given birth to the small fish.

⁶ see story 10.

From there it swam down the coast and visited the entrances of Ngatpáet near Nggēsear, Ngatagalábad nearby Goikúl, Ngarekedlúkl nearby a Irai, the Toágēl mid nearbei Goréōr, Kesebōkú nearby Malágēl ¹. There, at Cape Ngaremediu it gave birth to a gamáng-mangrove crab, in the Toágēl Pélau to a turtle and in Toeagēl’lióu to a megapode, both of which supposedly incubate their eggs in the sunlight (see story 191). In the Dégēs-entrance the fish gave birth to a rekúng-land crab and this one to dag rekúng “crab excrement”. Finally the fish came to the big strait Makáep ² between Peliliou and Ngeaur. There it found at the promontory Pkul a dúdēs a good place, a cave with water, whereit gave birth to a daughter ³, who received the name Dilēpelāu.

She grew up quickly. One day she saw some children from Ngeaur bathing in the saltwater nearby the cave. She asked her mother, if she could play with the children and when she got the permission she joined the crowd. A daughter of rubak II a Ugélabúōg from Ngarapelaū reported at home about the new play mate and was asked to bring her home. In the evening, when the children were bathing again in the sea and when Dilēpelāu once again joined them, the daughter of the chief invited her to come with her to blai Ngatēlkóu ⁴, where her mother awaited her, hoping that Dilēpelāu would stay in their family. Dilēpelāu dove down to her mother and asked for her permission. Yes do so, this one said, and when they treat you badly, then come back to me.

— So the girl stayed with her friend in blai Ngatēlkóu and grew up. Then it happened that Dilēpelāu’s body and limbs swelled. The chief was afraid that she might be leprous. Therefore, he separated her in a special shed. Her food was delivered with the help of a pole. His daughter also had to stay away. Still, she used every chance to see her friend unnoticed and faithfully stayed with her. Grateful Dilēpelāu endured until her time had come to reward her.

Some time later, when the old folks were not at home, the friends played together as usual. Then Dilēpelāu suddenly said: My time has come; accompany me down to the sea, to Dúdēs, where we first met! — Together they went down and on the beach the invalid said to her companion: Give me your gotúngēl-bag. — Dilēpelāu took it, put her swollen fingers inside, and wiped them off and at once the bag filled with money. Afterwards, she took sis and lap ⁵ leaves and said: Take them home and plant them, sis is good to wash away sickness and lap brings back money.

— Aggrieved, the daughter of the chief returned to her house Ngatēlkóu, which became one of the richest in Palau. Dilēpelāu, though dove down to her mother and told her what had happened. Then the female fish told her daughter to sit on her back and swam away with her. However, she swam in such a fashion, that her daughter remained above the water and told her to collect all pieces of driftwood, so that it would accumulate to an island, on which she could accomplish her birth. When Dilēpelāu had created an island, she gave birth to an egg, from which a curlew delārók ⁶ hatched and from her swellings came so many pieces of money that the entire island, called Ngorót was covered with them like with pebbles.

¹ see the entrances Vol. 1.

² 1907 belongs to Makiap; also called Gēúgēl.

³ The father is not mentioned, compare with story 193 about Tēlámēs and the fish-women at the same spot; below the duk trigger fish is mentioned as the husband.

⁴ Blai VII Gomurēng in Ngarapelaū was supposedly also called Ngatēlkóu. It certainly has a close connection with blai I, that received the title Dilēpelaū (see below) and when deláség had the shellfish gai (see Bai 29 IVa). KUB. mentions rubak I a Ugerepalau as the master of the house and the house Matelgou. D.-pl. 2^a shows the rich house with the platform for the exhibition of women when they had their first child, the lament of the birds, etc.

⁵ When someone collects a debt, he takes along lap leaves, over which he says some magic words.

⁶ KUB. calls him first okak (= gokak), later on Adalrok.

The curlew grew up very fast and gave birth to many chicks. Now the fish-mother said, it is about time to think also of the man, who once so lovingly raised me and cared for me on Ngarekeklaū. Fill the curlew with money and send it there as a reward. —

The Delārók asked his mother: What is this island? Is it a fish, as it constantly swims here and there? — Dilēpelāu replied: See, you were born here and I was born in Ngeaur̃. You can fly and visit all our people. — Thus, the curlew first flew to Ngeaur̃, then to Peliliou, where he first remained floating in the air above Ngaremangiaū with “shivering wings”¹. Then he flew to Ngardolólok and settled close to the galid-house. Yet, some people threw stones at the strange bird until the galid spirit managed to “unify all opinions“, which is why house nr. 1 is still known today as Gomūg tökói. The legendary stone, called Delārók, is also standing nearby this house as a reminder of this encounter. From here the bird flew to Goréör where it sat on the house of rubak nr. 1. People took a bamboo pole as a ladder – did –, in order to climb it and to catch the bird. Therefore, the name a Idid for this house.

It flew away to Ngaramlungúi to the house of rubak nr. II Ngirturóng; when it wanted to rest there on the ground there, children threw at it for their amusement and nearly killed it. Therefore, the house is called Ngarturóng from turūdēl “playfully destroying”. It continued its trip to Ngabúkēd to the house of high chief Mad. People thought the bird’s big wings would destroy the house, yet it stayed, therefore the name Túblai ². When continuing its flight north, it floated above the main square of Ngaregolóng, still and unmoving galāl’lákl, this is why this place has its name Mangal’lákl. Finally Delārók reached the island Ngarekeklaū. After it heard that this was be the right place, he sat down on the ground. When the rubak had gathered in the bai, it first vomited the money into the basket of a Ugélkeklaū, then it was the turn of the other chiefs. Only one, a Ilamúr ³, was missing because he had gone fishing. When he arrived late and saw what had happened, he grabbed the bird and squeezed it (see log. d.-pl. 2^c); only one piece with the name Dabú came out, a round piece of glass, with a diameter of 5 cm.

According to another information the animal supposedly died because of this above-mentioned rough treatment, which is why there is so little money on Palau. According to a third information Góbak rabau from Ngarabau supposedly sent for the Delärok. He also received it and brought it to the bai, where the bird was placed on a mat. When they squeezed it, however, shouting: delěrók mo magel! Curlew, deliver! Instead of money only bagadei -dung came on their mats, this is why the bai still has its name. Finally, according to another information, the fisherman gave the bird some cooked coconut kernel to eat, after which it produced the very big br’rak Ngarugedík that is said to be still in the possession of the family nr. II in Goréör. Besides it supposedly said to the fisherman: Make a new net, then you will catch many *meseki*u-sea cows, and you will become a rich man.

Thus it happened, that the fisherman became the rich Kloulúbak from Ngarekeklaū. The bird itself turned into a stone that is said to be still standing there today and which is called Malk ⁴. In the opinion of the Palauans, the island Ngorót is still swimming around in the sea; if a ship happens to come near then a gust of rain is hiding it. The title Dilēpelāu went to Ngeaur̃ to blai I of Ngarapelāu, as a reward for the friend’s fidelity. Money only arrived there and in Ngarakeklaū ⁵, from where it was distributed all over the archipelago.

¹ see also the title Diramangiaū of family II of a Ikelāu in Goreör. The children asked: mang kiau raukúp? ”What kind of bird is this?”

² The explanation is not clear; probably tu = to enter, as for instance bomtu ra blai = means “go into the house”. In Polynesian, though, tu means “to stand”, which would be a better explanation.

³ now rubak IV of Keklaū, according to KUB. his mother was called Eluajerueleu.

⁴ see story 11 about Bói.

⁵ acc. to KUB. the 3 rich houses are Ngatēlkóu on Ngeaur̃, Karmong in Keklau, where the “mother of Baraks”, Adaltal a barak (= dalál a br’rák) is, and the house of Ardahor in Kyangle (blai I Ngardókou in Ngardims on Nggeiangēl). I was told the following houses where the richest: Ngatēkou on Ngeaur̃, Gomūg tökói in Ngardolólok, a Idid on Goréör, Blósög in Ngarmíd, Goráol in Ngarekeai, a Udēs in Meleké-iok, Ngaruēós in Ngaragēlūk (Ngival), and Terékēd in Keklaū.

The Journey Of Rdegór.

Money from Ngorót came also to Nggeiangēl. a Rdegór, rubak I from Ngardims, went fishing with his son. At night they reached a reef where the boy fastened the canoe to a rock. The father had fallen asleep. Suddenly the son realized that the canoe had drifted further and further away from the island. When he looked at the rock, he noticed that it was the tail of a giant dukl ¹- trigger fish, who is considered to be the husband of the fish-mother Tēmkaī. After some time the boy remarked that the canoe touched ground. They had arrived on the shore of an island, which was tightly covered with stones. He picked them up and threw them playfully around ².

Yet, they always returned. He put some pieces into the canoe and slept on the outrigger. In the meantime the fish brought the canoe back to Nggeiangēl, where father and son woke up. When the old man saw the money in the canoe, he asked his son where it came from and the son told him what had happened. The father scolded his son, because he had not woken him up. Then they ate breakfast. But when they opened the nuts, part of the money flew away, and they immediately stopped. Therefore, it is not allowed to open nuts in the interior of rich houses.

Dilēpelāu supposedly had come to Ngáruangēl where she was killed because of her money. As a punishment for this, a flood came over the island; story 20 about Ngáruangēl, however, tells a different story.

Story 10. The Story Of Melíp And Gabēlebál.

log.: bi 5 IV^b d.-pl. 2^c, bai 8 V^a, (bai 55 VI^b), bai 88 II^b, lizard and sun bai 130 w. illustr. 19, in Vol. 5 a.

Laiebád was the son of a Ugéltmél, who was the galid, the god of Ngatmél ³ and lived in heaven. His favorite bird was the little pied cormorant deróiög ⁴. From time to time a Ugétmél came down to earth, where he chose a wife in Ngatmél, who gave birth to the already mentioned Laiebád.

One day, when he went fishing with a companion, his canoe drifted with a westerly storm to the east, all the way to Matáng rengós ⁵, the double mountain. The companion climbed one of the rocky cones, the home of a big lizard lived ⁶. He soon became its victim. Laiebád became aware of it, when the blood of his friend dripped from above on his hand. Then he knew that his friend was dead ⁷. Sadly he climbed from the other side on top of the mountain and when he spotted his father’s favorite bird he quickly jumped on its back. At once the deróiög flew away, into the sky/ heaven. A tall almond tree stood at the entrance of the channel that led to the Ugéltmél’s canoe house ⁸. The bird sat down on it and Laiebád waited until his father returned home.

The following day he finally arrived in the company of another son, who carried bananas. Laiebád stepped down and asked for one. The boy did as he was asked. However, when Laiebád asked his father for more, he gave him two and said to his son, who had come with him:

¹ Monacanthus sp.

² according to KUB. he collected stones in his basket and threw them after the many curlew so that only few of them remained. Ardahor’s house became the third richest one in Palau. Because of Gólei’s fortune see at Ngiratei (story 30a). The island became green and for instance the money carrying tree kelau ra Ngorót and the vine besepesél a Ngorót, which is depicted so often on the bai in an ornamental fashion.

³ Ngatmél is situated in the NE-corner of the big island Babldáob, Vol. 2.

⁴ The Graculus melanoleucus Vieill, black, white, half a seabird, half a terrestrial bird, frequently at Lake Ngardok.

⁵ This can only be Kusáe, that consists of a northern and a southern part, both high mountains, separated by a deep saddle, therefore, forked in the east, see story 8.

⁶ this seems to be a kind of golubás; it has to be imagined as the child of the sun armed with its rays, see bai 88, Iib.

⁷ see bai 49, KUB. VIII, p. 304. “The Matan el pat, the bi-ramiform tree, on which the Troyok-bird sat, which belonged to Angel keklau; it fought foreign arrivals”. This is all that is known about this legend.

⁸ Terminalia catappa, called miěg or gotógēl.

Share and ask for his name and how he came here. — In this manner a Ugéltmél learned that Laiebád was his son¹. This one followed him into his house and helped with the work.

One day the father told his sons: Do not go to the other end of the house! Laiebád became curious and when his father had left, he asked his brother what was in the other end of the house. When this one told him that he did not know, he convinced his brother to go there together in order to find out. They both went there and opened the door and saw Ngatmél lying deep down in front of them. When Laiebád saw his home, he got very homesick and started crying. a Ugél heard it and asked his second son: Why is Laiebád crying? Did you hit him? — No replied the other, and reported what had happened. Therefore, a Ugéltmél talked to Laiebád: Do not cry; in two days you will be at home. — When the time for departure came closer, the younger brother gave his older one the following advice: When someone offers you farewell presents, refuse all of them; ask only for what is on the bottom of the fish baskets. — Laiebád did as his brother had told him, refusing everything that was offered to him². Only when he was asked if he wanted to have what was in the fishing baskets did he say yes and, thus, he received a few hand held fishing nets, the well known derâu. In this manner these nets arrived in Ngatmél and spread all over Pélau, because he learned the art to make them³.

a Ugéltmél also taught him the art of navigation, showed him the necessary stars and explained him the yearly moons⁴. — On the second day after the incident in the heavenly house, when the instructions were finished, Ugéltmél placed his son together with the hand-held fishing nets into a bamboo pole, he closed it, and threw it down into the sea nearby Ngatmél, so that it drifted there.

It was just morning low tide (bor), when Kėrorumáng, rubak nr. I of Ngatmél came to the beach. The piece of bamboo was lying there. He kicked it with his stick and had a shock when he suddenly heard a voice inside shouting: What is this? Who is injuring me? — Quite alarmed he ran inland. After some time he took courage, returned, and opened the tube. To his surprise Laibád came out, he told him his adventures, and returned with him to the village. There, Laiebád stayed with his mother. Some time later he ordered his friends to cut the young shouts of the *garamál*⁵, to skin it and to store the stems for some time in salt water. Then he showed them how to build the frame of the derâu -net with these previously prepared twigs. When the May-moon was 5 days old all had finished their nets. In heaven a Ugél saw this and threw the gúiět-tree⁶ into the ocean. There, the fish gathered around it dragging it to Ngatmél.

Then the young men jumped in with the catchers and scooped fish in great numbers out of the water.⁷ However, a Ugél’s favor resulted in unhappiness for his son. Laiebád married and had two sons, Melíp and Gabėlebál. Once a big ruk-dance was supposed to take place in Ngatmél and Laibád belonged to the group of men who were supposed to train and prepare for the dance in klemeai, seclusion. These men were not allowed to eat fish. Laiebád did not follow this rule, which angered the god of the village.

¹compare Terkélel story 19.

²compare story 137.

³ see p.-vol. 3.

⁴see Vol. 3, fishing techniques; log. bai 55 V1b depicts Kėrorumáng’s fight with rubak Iegád ě gúi (story 11) about the time of the full moon

⁵Hibiscus tiliaceus.

⁶*alled ugul a gúiět*: WALL. chuit er a Ngatmél, constellation of the stars. “pillar of Ngatmél” to which, according to the legend, a great number of fish supposedly had come, gúiět, coconut branches as signs of a taboo, story 195.

⁷see story 11 about Boi, and there the water hole Úgul a gúiět re Ngatmél.

One day, when Laiebád, his wife, and his two sons sailed to the island Ngaregúr, which is situated quite close to the north of Ngátmél, a strong southwestern wind arose that carried the canoe out of the lagoon into the open sea. For a long time they wandered about until they landed in Uékeüid¹. They lived there for a long time, and when Laibád became old and weak; he ordered both his sons to fetch lianas and to plait fish baskets with which they should catch some fish. When they checked the basket, that had been set out, a turtle and a number of fish were inside. They speared them. Then they went to the next resting place and Melíp suggested they roast the turtle for their parents here. Gabėlebál, however, shouted: Why? We will eat it ourselves! — Melíp had to give in, yet he pitied his poor old father, so that he hid a piece of roasted meat in his hair.

In the evening, when both brothers came back home, the younger one, Melíp, went ahead up to the house with the fish basket. Gabėlebál quickly followed him, out of fear that Melíp would spill the beans. Melíp prepared the fish and cooked them. When he had finished, his older brother said: Come, now we want to wash ourselves! — and when the younger one pretended to have some more work to do, Gabėlebál urged him so much that he went with him. While the first one washed his body and his hair, Melíp only cleaned his body. Afterwards both of them went to their parent’s house, ate dinner, and went to the bai to sleep.

Yet, when Gabėlebál slept, Malíp silently left and returned to his father’s house. He knocked until the old man woke up. What do you want, my son, he asked. Are you hungry? — Melíp negated and pressed to enter the house until the father agreed. Then Melíp went into the house, fetched a long wooden bowl from the rack and placed the piece of meat from his hair on top of it. The father asked him what this was and he replied: Wake up mother and eat! — He told them everything that had happened with Gabėlebál. After both the old people had finished eating Melíp, just like he had come, quietly returned to bed. The following evening Laiebád told his good son: Go again with Gabėlebál to the bai; when he sleeps, return unnoticed, because I want to talk to you!

— As he had been told. Melíp came back. This pleased the old man, he took him outside into the night, showed him the stars, and instructed him about navigation. He told him about the seasons, the winds, and the moons. And so he did during the following nights, until he had taught his son all, that he had learned from a Ugél in heaven². Some time later, Laiebád said, you still need a good canoe, too. I plant here a breadfruit tree for you and, in order to prevent Gabėlebál to fight your right of possession of the tree trunk, I will do the following: I place the small plant into a bowl, a Tridacna shell and cover all of it with earth, so that he cannot see it. As the tree grows, it will enclose the shell. You know where it sits. If Gabėlebál tries to fell the tree then his axe will splinter, and if you have not told him beforehand, he will have to acknowledge your right. Yet, you should still create an additional proof, in case he proves to be difficult. When the tree trunk is well developed, cut it at the top and place a stone on top of it, so that this one also grows in, this time at the other end. — Soon afterwards Laiebád died and Melíp followed his advice. When the tree had grown tall and had a thick stem, Melíp called his friends and said:

Help me my friends, I want to cut down this breadfruit tree, in order to build a sailing canoe. Gabėlebál heard this and contested the younger brother’s right to the tree, which belonged to him the older one. Melíp gave in and said: You shall have it, even though it is mine, which I can prove. I will be satisfied with the old canoe. — When Gabúlebál began to cut down the tree at the bottom, Melíp shouted: Aim a bit higher, here is a stone in the tree, which will spoil you adze. — Let him talk the older one said, this is my canoe! —

¹ see story 8.

²According to another Palauan source the old man told his bad son everything incorrect, so that he perished.

Thus, Melíp let him go ahead and saw how the axe hit the shell and cracked. Don’t you see, he shouted laughingly, this is my tree? I held the seedling in my hands and planted it in the shell. — Gabëlebál, however, did not care and when the tree had been felled, he started to cut off the branches from the upper trunk. Once again Melíp shouted: Aim a bit lower, there is a stone in the trunk. Gabëlebál, though did not care and once again broke his adze. Then his companions discussed how this could be possible. Melíp told them what had happened. But Gabëlebál lied and insisted he had planted the tree. The younger one gave in and said: You shall have the new canoe, I will be content with the old one. — in this way Gabëlebál had his way.

Melíp, however, gathered his friends in order to restore the old canoe and to newly rig it. In order to get a new sail he travelled over the ocean to his father’s home country Ngatmél, stayed there some time, filled his canoe with taro, and sailed to the nearby island Nggeiangël, where he replaced the old sail by a new one. Then he returned to Uékeüíd. Upon his arrival the canoe of his brother was just about being finished and was just being painted. The new journey of both brothers was to begin shortly. Melíp’s companions advised him to immediately ready his cargo consisting of provisions for the new journey. He replied to place all of it along the beach and said Gabëlebál could take from it as much as he wanted. Gabëlebál heard this and filled his canoe with them. Some was left over; Melíp asked for it and received it. He said: this will be sufficient for us.

— When everything was ready for departure the older one started to punt the canoe out into deep water. Before setting sails, it was a seafarers’ tradition to anchored the ship in the lagoon and people from Mógëmog had a particular suitable spot for this. Gabëlebál knew nothing about this, he hoisted the sail and sailed away. Melíp called: He does not understand it! ¹ Then he got his canoe ready for sailing and people watched eagerly what he would do. He asked: Are my doormats ² here and my lime? They were brought and he stored them in the right hold. After everything was on board, they punted out. Everyone was sitting on the beach, in order to see if he would know the right anchorage. However, outside in the lagoon Melíp, took the anchoring pole, fastened the rope to it, and stuck it into the right hole. All were surprised, soon afterwards he hoisted his sail, and sailed away. When Melíp’s canoe had reached the middle of the ocean he commanded his people to bring the doormats and to cover all the hatchways with them. All were perplexed by this measure, but soon they realized what it was for. Because immediately afterwards incredible swarms of sardines came, whole schools jumped out of the water, and if the hatch would have been open the ship would have sunk. Thus, they made the best of it, filled their baskets, and sailed on ³.

Melíp intelligently and courageously mastered many adventures. The most dangerous was also the last one. In the ocean around Ponape, the pirate Lalekuór made a nuisance of herself. All ships that came into her domain were captured ⁴ and their crew was killed. Courageous Melíp sailed into her waters. When he finally met her in her big, beautiful canoe, he wanted to have this canoe. Boldly he addressed her asking for a coconut to drink. He received her on the bow, stayed there in conversation and when Lalekuór drank, bending the head backwards, he threw her lime into the eyes so that she cried out loud in pain and was unable to see anything. Then he killed her, chased away the crew, and took possession of the canoe ⁵. When he installed himself comfortably on the new canoe, Gabëlebál arrived, weakened and sad.

¹ melobótop iikr is an expression for, verbatim: “he navigates outside”.

² the rectangular weave of coconut fronds that is hung outside of a residential house

³ here is a certain parallel with the Samoan legend of Gaiuli and Gaisina, who followed an instruction and covered their hatchways, thus, saving their canoe from the jumping mullets (the Samoan islands I vol. p. 427.

⁴ according to a Palauan definition, this was accomplished with her big elongated lab. min. (begél), which she left floating in the sea and with which she ensnared the ships. She seems to have been the wife of a Ugélkeklâu from Matang rengós (Kusáe), from whom she had a daughter aLálamong, see story 8, a. 30a from Ngiratei.

⁵ see the gable of blai 130 in Ngarmid, where the giant Ngaleksmaoáng is depicted.

He had lost nearly all his people, the remaining ones were so hungry that they had nearly eaten up the sail. They had not found any land. Melíp received them friendly, gave them food, and brought them home to Uékeüíd, where he became the founder of the navigational instructions in the Caroline Islands.

Story. 11. The Galid spirit Bói ¹ With His Schools Of Fish.

log.: bai 25 VI^a, bai 41 VIII illustr. d.-pl. 2f (Jegádëgüi), bai 47 VI^b illustr. d.-pl. 2^e, bai 54, bai 55 III^b, bai 59 IV^b illustr d.-pl. 1, bai 74 VIII, bai 76 I, bai 100 w., bai 102 IV^a, bai 113 II^a, bai 120 VI^b, bai 129 I, bai 130 V^b illustr. d.-pl. 2^d, bai 137 III^b, bai 144 III^a illustr. d.-pl. 2^e, bai 149 I. The broken rain-arm of Medegeipélau is shown: bai 115 IV^b, bai 132 V^b illustr., bai 145 I. Boi with the many spears see KUB. VIII pl. 43.

Boi is the god of gusts of rain that are accompanied by fish and birds. He is considered to be the liberator of Ngariáp. Compiling different sources, his complete story is the following: Rubak nr. I from Ngardims on Nggeiangël, a Rdegór, built an old fashioned canoe for the open sea, a kaberúög. Then the telbákl ², the specialists in the magic of construction arrived and said from time to time: ngara këléd r tiáng ³? What is our food for this?

— The owner said: Fish and taro. — Good they said, call us when you are finished. — a Rdegór, however, did not do so, instead he left with his daughter. Close to Nggeiangël is Lemau, a spot of deep water. When the two of them passed by, the telbákl climbed out of the water, into the canoe, and shouted: “Now a Rdegór, what did we say? We have built the canoe. You are a liar!” — They condemned him and then disappeared again. At once a storm started and drove the canoe southwards. It reached Gólēi at the northwestern headland of Babldáob.

There, Boi lived and since he was alone he welcomed the people. He took Rdëgór’s daughter as his wife. Soon, though, her health became unstable. She grew skinnier and grouchy. When the father asked her for the reason, she complained about her plight: My husband is treating me badly! — When the father pressed her to explain in more detail, she confessed after some reluctance: He is breaching the rules. He has many “spears”⁴, all of them enter the openings of my body at the same time. — Then the old man pondered how to safe his daughter from this demon. Boi was always cutting palm-juice. One day, a Rdëgór said to him: When you go cutting, bring me a sheath of flowers ⁵— Bói brought the old man what he had wanted and the old man fashioned a canoe with a sail from it, with which he sailed along the beach for his amusement. When Bói was gathering palm-juice he saw it and shouted down from the palm tree: This is good! When I am finished, I will also give it a try. Come a Rdëgór, you cut the sheath of the blossoms, while I sail. — The old man came to the shore and explained Bói, who had come down from the palm tree, how to operate the vehicle. Finally he said to him: When you are out at the reef and you have to tack, then you simply say: úgulagëtiú, bor a teliáng, ë ng dilú uadám Tack, go to the other end, because the father said so.

Bói did everything as had been explained. Yet, when he was on the reef and said the words, the magic malfunctioned, and he realized that his father in law and his wife wanted to get rid of him. He called back: uádam, it is your place, I am leaving! ⁶ — After a long journey, his canoe landed in Ngurungór on Pelíliou and he moved from there to Ngariáp, where everyone was in mourning.

¹ already story 10 brings some information about him; especially the following story 12; he supposedly is the galid spirit of Ngaregëu on Pelíliou, although he is originally from Ngatmél, see also story 197.

² commonly called godögül, see construction of a house.

³ këléd poss. c. pers. plur of kál food.

⁴ in Palau for intercourse the membrum virile is shortly called “spear”lild (actually the cane, from which the shaft of the spear is made). Illustr. see Bai 54 a. KUB. VIII, pl. 43³.

⁵ The sheathes of the coconut’s blossoms are strong and have the form of a dinghy. Usually they are only 1—2 feet long.

⁶ see story 100 about Tangerangói.

The women were crying because of the human sacrifice ¹ who was supposed to go to Ngarekobasáng. Seeing their grief, Bói felt pity and offered himself as a substitute. On the following day the war-canoe left with him as the sacrifice. When they reached Cape a Pkulagobagád, he created a roaring gust of rain, forcing them to go under ground. The crew of the canoe went into a cave, while Bói remained on board, in order to pay attention. He went into the hull of the canoe and turned into a mangerengér, a sea snake, which slowly started to swell to such an extent, that the canoe started sinking. Shocked the chiefs hurried over and shouted: You god of Ngariáp, if you so desire, we will give up the sacrifice!

— Immediately the snake shrank and soon Bói was sitting again in form of a human being on the outrigger. The journey ended on the beach of Ngarekobasáng. Bói was the first one to go on shore and soon started playing cock fight with the children who had gathered there. His rooster was a coconut wrapper, the lower part of which was charcoaled, so that the animal’s belly appeared to be black, while the upper side was reddish. Even today chicken, drawn in this fashion, are therefore still called del’lúl suls, “roasted coconut wrapper”. While they played, he took the chance to ask, who owned the best rooster in Pélau. The children replied, that all were bad, only a Jegád ě gúi ² in Ngatmél owned a real good one.

— Thus, he took his toy chicken and moved northwards up the coast. Arrived in Ngatmél, he asked Jegád if it was true that he had the best rooster. When his answer was affirmative, Bói said to his rooster: Now you have to fight. But only push once and then fall down as though dead. — So it happened. Shocked about the outcome, Jegád invited Bói to come into his house, in order to appease his anger. He asked him not to be upset and offered some money as compensation. Bói said: I do not want your money! — Jegád replied: Then I offer you my rooster as compensation! — Bói, however, had his eye on something else, something which he desired and Jegád said soon enough: Then take my favorite fish, the most cherished ones I own.— Bói agreed and went to the channel where he fastened the bunch ³ of fish to a line, then he moved with his treasure down the west coast and arrived in a Imelĭk. He sent a message to the high chief and to Gálid Itúngělbai, that he wanted Gokerdŭl, the small island in front of the coast, to leave his spawning fish there. Túngělbai did so, but Boi passed by with his school of fish, followed by the friends of incubating fish, wind and rain. Túngělbai was enraged hurling spiny sea urchins and other sea animals after him. Bói, however, continued unerringly and came to Ngurultágěl nearby Ngarmíd.

There, in the water Uél, the high chief a Jegád rultágěl cared for his own favorite fishes. Bói put his fish also in there and attached them to the line. Now a great turmoil started in the water. The water became turbid and soon it was found out that Bói’s fish had killed some of the fish, which had already been in the pond. Then Jegád rultágěl became angry and hit Bói. He struck at his backside. Thus, he escaped with his pigeons and fish to Ngurusár ⁴, where he once again fastened the last ones.

When the woman of the settlement passed him he asked one after the other to delouse him. All of them refused. Only the last one was willing to do so ⁵, even though she was afraid. She was still working on him when the women returned. In the evening, when she went home, he gave her 2 kěmědúkl-fish ⁶ and also released for her the eel kitelél, which had been bound to the end of the line. This one swam up the channel to the river a Ulogúl, and ever since has been venerated as goddess Diraalogŭl in Ngurusár.

¹ see story 12 Mangidáp.

² he was mentioned in Vol. 2. As a galid spirit, he gave birth to a girl from a tick knee. see log. Bai 41 VIII.

³ l mál the school of fish.

⁴ It is said, that he went to a Pdŭl and a Ulābāgád, this is the name of the extinct settlement next to Tueapěl. He supposedly still is in this last place.

⁵ compare story 202.

⁶ a big, green-blue kind of scarus.

Bói married Diralámes from Ngurusár. One day, he brought the blossom of a coconut into the house of her mother and attached it there. To Boi’s great pleasure a lot of juice seeped out of it. However, when his mother-in-law returned from the taro field and saw a lot of flies around the source of the sweet juice, she threw the blossom away, which soon enough returned to its tree.

The following is another information how Bói got his fish: Bói’s mother was an old woman in Ngatmél, which is situated on the northeastern headland of the big island Babldáob. The old woman was called Gobagád l tmél.¹ Most of all, the boy loved fish, which he placed into small ponds, more than everything. His mother took a few leaves of a Dracaena (orredakl)and said some magic words over them. Now, whenever the boy held the leaves above the water, the fish came towards him and with this magic trick he filled the water of a Ugul a gúiĕt rengatmél ². When this one became too small, he took a line and gave it to his mother, asking her to say some magic words. His mother did so and now he looked first for a new place for his fish, finding it nearby Gokerdŭl, a small island on the beach of a Imelĭk. He had an agreement with the local galid spirit a Itúngělbai, that the site was to be cleared, so that he could care for the fish from Ngatmél. Túngělbai promised to do so and Bói continued his trip to Ngramíd, where he really liked it.

Then he came to Ngatmél, in order to get his fish. Túngělbai saw Bói in his gust of rain coming down the western coast. But the gust passed Gokerdŭl, because Bói preferred to go to Ngarmíd. Furiously, Túngělbai wanted to chase him, but Bói threw mólog-sea cucumbers, gaisóis-sea stars and the kmai-crab after him; this one pinched the chief and kept him so long busy until Bói could escape. He went to Nguraltágěl nearby Ngarmíd. There he became annoyed, took his fish and pigeons, and went to Gomológŭl ³ nearby a Iraĭ. Rain and wind followed him there. Then the powerful demon Medegeĭpélau ⁴ was just fishing at that place, surprised he watched the procession, and asked Bói: What is this? — This one replied: These are my fish!— Now Medegeĭpélau asked to be allowed to lead the fish? Bói permitted it and, totally enchanted, he led them up and down four times.

The fifth time, however, he left with the line to a Iraĭ. Ranting and threatening Bói went after him, but he was not heard. He was helpless against the powerful and devious Medegeĭpélau ⁵. Even today, in the month gěĭag ⁶ big schools of fish come into the waters of a Iraĭ, and people catch a lot of them. Bói left in a rage. He returned to Ngaregolóng and fetched the rooster. This one had come into his house and had killed his chicken. Jegáděgúi from Nggúi in Ngaregolóng bought the rooster from Bói paying a lot of fish and pigeons for it, so that he once again had his favorite animals.

Story 12. About Mangidáp⁷ rutkól And Human Sacrifices In Ngarekobasáng.

log.: bai 13 II^a, bai 16 VI^a, blai Ngěsěgeĭ bai 22 VIII^b, bai 26 III^b d.-pl. 3^a, bai 36 VII^a, bai 49 N., bai 55 e. pl. IV^a, bai 56 V^a d.-pl. 3^b, bai 67 V^b, bai 84 III^a, bai 92 e., bai 95 IV^b, bai 98 w. pl. I ^a, bai 99 w., bai 102 E., bai 112 II^a, bai 140 III^b pl. XII^b, bai 142 V^b, bai 145 VII^b.

¹ Even today, fishermen and palm cutters still call on her. See story 10.

² the trunk of gúiĕt from Ngatmél, see story 10 about Melip and Gabělebál.

³ Island width 19^o.

⁴ see story 197.

⁵ in several bai (115 IVb, 132 V b) he is depicted with a broken rain-arm, a sign that he was harmed in the fight.

⁶ around November, the entire area of the lagoon at the headland of Babldáob, nearby Gomológŭl?, Pkŭl a pngěĭ, Ngasmasáog (closet to the island ng Kesil’l) is filled with schools of fish. This phenomenon happens in many places of the South Pacific, etc. as a pre-solstitial phenomenon.

⁷”Spider”, into which the galid can turn.

Mangidáp was educated in the house Godëbísëg ¹ in Ngatanggâu on Pelíliou. One day, he saw a woman in the house Ngaruketkól in Ngariáp. Thus, he cast his thread to the Spondias-tree standing in front of the house and went over. He lived there together with the old woman, who was his mother. Often, the handsome boy went to Ngerikl, by climbing on the godebísëg-tree in front of the house, casting his thread over and then gliding on it there. From this tree he threw his thread to another tree, on which the fishermen had built their skokl-platform to observe the fish. From here he watched the fishermen from Ngival, how they caught shark with a loop outside the reef, in the open sea. He was so interested in it that he wanted to see this at close range. When a canoe came close to the edge of the reef he threw his thread at its mast and followed. Soon the helmsman noticed the man on the tip of the mast and called to the sailors: “Go into the direction of the open sea, then the man on the tip of the mast will die!” However, their guest did not die.

Thus, they turned around and sailed inland to Keklâu. On their way north, passing the village Ngivál, Mangidáp cast his thread on a large breadfruit tree there and moved over. A blai was next to the tree. There he stayed and lived together with the female owner of the house. The women of Ngivál sent messengers, urging him to marry the woman, but he did not want to. This one had already noticed that he desired Túrang re ngësëgeî, the daughter of high chief Rësëgeî, from the part of the village called Ngaremegâu. Indeed, one night he climbed the breadfruit tree, threw his thread to the spondias-tree in front of blai Ngësëgeî, and went there just in time when Túrang went to take a bath. When she passed the tree, he bit off a piece of an apple and threw it down in front of her. She picked it up muttering to herself: What kind of a bird might this be? — She looked up, but did not see anything, because Mangidáp sat high in the treetop. Then she went to the bathing hole, cleaned herself, and returned.

When she passed again the tree, he threw the seeds of the fruit he had eaten down in front of her. Thus, she realized that it had to be a human being. Soon he spotted him and called him to come down. He climbed down to the lower part of the tree and Turang asked him his name. He said: Mangidáp!

— When she had also told him her name, he told her to go into the house; after sunset he would leave the tree and would visit her in the adjoining house ². She did what he had told her and, in that night, they became a couple. In the morning, only when the children came to the adjoining house to bring Turang’s food, they saw the man and they told the girl’s parents their suspicion. Towards evening the old ones called the new couple and asked both of them if they wanted to stay together. After both of them had agreed the parents consented to the new union. From now on two bowls of food, instead of one, were brought every day to the adjoining house. Turang became pregnant. When she was eight months pregnant, she told Mangidáp. He became sad, because in those days it was not known in Ngivál that women could give birth in a natural way. People cut their bodies of all of them open to take the baby out ³. Mangidáp decided to ask his mother in Ngariáp for advice and therefore said to his wife: Stay and wait, I will go to my mother. In one month’s time I will be back.

— He threw his thread all the way to Ngariáp and hurried over. His mother told him how it was to be done: the feet must be propped up against a post, while a man or a woman should press and caress the woman who is about to give birth. Immediately after birth a potion should be drunk, then, after 1—2 weeks a sweat bath should follow ⁴. Finally, the ngásăg-day has to be celebrated, when she shows herself publicly after the bath, beautifully dressed, standing on coconut fronds in front of the house on the stone pavement..

¹ named after godebísëg, a tree similar to a Calopyllum, at the beach with leaves that burst with a loud noise in the fire, (see story 173c).

² seems to be a shrine uilangâng.

³ see MÜLLER Yap p. 685.

⁴ called bliükûl; the sick person sits in a chest that is covered with mats. It is heated with hot water, in which leaves are soaking.

When Mangidáp knew everything, he returned to Ngivál. There, people had built many small houses in order to keep the poor pregnant woman company and to supply her with the best food. She was now in her tenth month. He said to her. When you feel the labor pains, you tell only me. I want to save you. — In the first quarter she felt the labor pains early. She told him and he ordered her to wait and not to tell anyone. When the pains became so strong that she could hardly bear them, she wanted him to tell her parents. He, however, took her into a corner, had her sit down and brace the legs against the wall, while he pressed and massaged her from the back. Around midday, Turang delivered a boy in this manner. He took him and told the mother to press on until the placenta came, too ¹. When the child cried, people in the neighborhood were very excited, because they thought that someone had, without telling them, cut open the woman in labor. But then they found all alive in the adjoining house.

They were glad, danced around, and sang:

a dălál a dikoié,	His mother lives,
ma ngálek a dikoié,	and my child lives,
a madál a Bai iē	on the front gable iē,
l mālánget a túangěl	block the door;
l kmu ma lak ² a tuóběd	therefore, nobody goes outside,
a ríkebil ră goměágěl ³	the girls in the room
l diak a mēklí ⁴	did not do it again.

Then, Turang took a hot bath ⁵ daily until the ngásăg-day, when it was the turn of the steam bath. Mangidáp organized it on the 10. day. Beforehand, he went via Ngardmâu to Ngarebökú ⁶, in order to fetch from there the long mangrove stilts for the steam shed. An archerfish (a ulói) saw him passing the channel on a string. The fish sputtered at the string and broke it, so that Mangidáp fell into the water and was devoured by the fish. Afterwards (see d.-pl. 3^a) the fish swam out into the open sea. Yet, when falling into the water, Mangidáp had a kikói ⁷ in his hand, because he wanted to cut the stilts with it. He started to scrape the fish with it from the inside, he ate from it, and also hoped to free himself in this way. The fish swam to the big entrance a Ivokáko, in fact to a branch with the name a Nglás. Due to Mangidáp he was so much in pain there, that he turned around at once and swam to the small entrance Mesíkm in the south. Here, too, he could not stand it and hurried further south to the small island Ngurúr close to Ngarekobasâng.

There the fish died and at first sank with its weight to the ground, yet, when it started to decompose it drifted to the surface and finally landed on the stone Badlulói, that was named after it. It is situated close to the shore of Ngarekobasâng. The inhabitants of the island found it there and cut at it, in order to open it. However, they were terribly shocked when a voice could be heard from the inside: Watch out that you do not cut me. — At first they fled, but when high chief Gobak ě ra ulögötóng shouted: If it is a demon, it is my demon; if it is a man, it is my man! — they returned and now they found in the inner parts of the fish a completely exhausted man with no hair and with thin, half digested skin. In the house of a Ulögötóng they placed him on top of a fire on a smoking grill. When he was dry, they washed him in warm water and medicine, which made him slowly come back to his senses. Now he explained where he came from and soon afterwards he went cutting palm juice.

¹ ongémăk ra rágăd »press the placenta«.

² ma lak and not.

³ goměágěl a room in the house, where the woman, who had given birth, (mlagél) is sitting.

⁴ mēklí one more time, this means, that before all had died and therefore could no longer give birth to any children.

⁵ gosúrŏg from măsúrŏg »to take a hot bath«, this is still custom today.

⁶ nearby Ngivál on the east coast.

⁷ According to another information, when she saw it, the woman gave the fish kělát, the mullet, a mother-of-pearl shell, in order to cut with it the ulói dead. This is why the kělát has such prominent gills.

In the meantime people from Ngariáp had been looking for him everywhere. Now they learned that Mangidáp stayed on Ngarekobasáng. Thus, all of them set forth to visit him there ¹. When the chiefs arrived they asked about his adventures and his health and wanted to take him home to Pelíliou. People on Ngarekobasáng, though, refused to set him free. So the chiefs of Ngariáp thought about what they should offer in order to free Mangidáp. Finally, they decided to offer the chiefs of Nagrekobasáng a young man as a sacrifice for their big feasts. — They said, when you roast him on a grill over the fire, the smell of human flesh will please you. Especially young men, enclosed to practice the festive dance, will be strengthened by the fragrance, just like their female servants. — Ngarekobasáng accepted the proposal ² and set Mangidáp free. His people were happy to bring him back to Pelíliou.

When they had been home for one month, they heard that the dancers in Ngarekobasáng had gone into the Bai in preparation of a big feast. Thus, at the following moon, they decided to sail to Nagrekobasáng with a young man as their sacrifice. That happened. They sailed with a big war-canoe and stopped to rest in a small passage called Búikmangái, between Ngurukdápēl and a Mototói. From here they went to the rock Badriáp and blew the conch shell, in order to announce their arrival with the “money”.

Then they took the boy to the cave Gongobítēl l dēlág, they drowned him, removed his intestines, in order to throw them into the cave, placed small sticks into his abdominal cavity, so that his body would keep its shape, then they stitched him up again. Then they took the body to blai Ulögōtong, in the village Ngarekobásang, where they placed it on the grid on top of the fire, into the smoke. Each day it was brought to blai Ngarmeseksíkt and was placed upon a big stone in front of the main gable, so that the dancers locked in there could enjoy the odor. This went on for about one month, until the preparations for the feast were complete. On the last day ³ Ngariáp also paid its financial contribution to the feast⁴ and stayed 4 days in order to see the dances and to taste the food. After paying another fee on the 3. day, they took the body from blai Ulögōtong to the rock Badariáp, wrapped it in mats, and finally they performed the funeral rites in the ground of the cave.

Then they sailed home to Pelíliou. After some time, when once again, such a big feast took place, people from Ngariáp delivered the second human sacrifice — for the chiefs of Ngarekobasáng and their god. When a canoe came to Pelíliou to announce the 3rd. feast, Rulebúsög ⁵, who was half men half galíd, was moved and took pity. He turned into a mosquito-larvae and entered the water of a tridacna shell, from which his mother used to drink. She swallowed the larvae, which in the body of the woman turned into a child. In this manner Rulebúsög was reborn and quickly grew up. Everything developed within a few weeks. After one month the child was already a young man and when the war canoe returned, in order to fetch the victim, and when three days were spent with ngabīl-feasting (last meal) were over, he offered himself and was accepted. On their trip north, when they reached Ngaregēu ⁶, where a resting place is situated nearby Pkul a Boi, everyone went on shore, only the boy remained on board and the demon of Ngaregēu by the name of Boi jumped on the outrigger.

¹ klegádaol the state visit.

² It is said that the human sacrifice (tengtúngēl or teltul) were in fact only delivered twice. When the Ngariáp-people arrived with their “money”, they stopped at the rock Badriáp and blew the conch shell. Then the young man was received and killed in the nearby cave Gongobítēl l delág by drowning him; his intestines were removed and thrown into the cave and his body was stuffed with leaves. It was closed by sewing it and the body as a whole was smoked and roasted on the grill.

³ bedikl kārākar the last day of preparations.

⁴ The participants of a big dancing feast participate also in the costs of the dancing feast.

⁵ galíd from Ngariáp.

⁶ island close to Pelíliou, see story 11 about Boi.

He sat down on the float, so that people thought it was the boy. Yet, Rulebúsög was in the hull of the canoe and turned into a sea snake ¹, which swell so much that the entire canoe was filled with it. One of the traveling party came on board, in order to fetch the young man and to bring him on shore. Appalled he saw how the canoe was nearly sinking threatened by this load. He ran back on shore to report. Quickly they sent back a message, saying the demon should not be angry, they would give up the sacrifice.

Then the snake became smaller and turned back into Rulebúsög. People, with Boi, as a companion on board, continued sailing north. In Kekerél tói ² and in Buikmangái came Gamasiógēl ³, the man in the two caves came and invited them on shore, which they did readily. Here Rulebúsög repeated his charade, while Boi sat on the float. Once again people begged for his forgiveness and the demon was pacified, became once again a young boy, together with Boi he sat down on the float and blew the conch shell. As soon as Rulebúsög had calmed down, people from Ngariá took heart again. Thus, they continued sailing north and arrived at the cave Gongobítēl l dēlág. Rulebúsög saw that his compatriots were inclined to relinquish him, therefore, he swelled once again into the form of a snake. In their fear people jumped into the water and begged for his mercy. When Rulebúsög sat again with Boi on the float and blew the conch shell, people from Nagrekobasáng thought that the sacrifice had arrived.

They came down to the beach where the canoe had arrived. A fourth time the boy swelled to the form of a sea snake, this time to the extent that the canoe sank in the shallow water. People from Nagrekobasanáng did not see any boy and got angry. They did not believe the reports of the Nagriáp-people, until the high chief Góbak ra Ulögōtong visited the canoe and assured himself, that they had told the truth. Then they realized that the human sacrifice (teltul) was a wicked thing and they dismissed their request; from then on, they took a pig instead of a human being. Yet, on that day, when they saw Boi, who had sat on the float, the old lust was kindled once again. After the canoe had sunk, he had come on shore carrying his pigeons and chickens on a stick. They tried to get him as teltul. Boi, however, ran inland. At Cape Kermúr he jumped over to Madalái on Goréor, thus escaping his pursuers. They went back, fetched Rulebúsög from the canoe, and brought him to blai ra Ulögōtong where they offered him the best food. Then they smoked a pig, in the same fashion as if it would be a human being, and they practiced their dance.

Meanwhile, people from Nariáp had returned to Pelíliou, content to be free of delivering tribute. Yet, the chiefs of Nagrekobasáng could not calm down so easily, that they had gotten away so cheaply. At the beginning of the feast they sent a canoe to Ngariáp with an invitation to come to the feast and to pay their financial share of it. People of Ngariáp came together with Rulebúsög. They stayed 3 days, paid their share, and then they went back home. A canoe from Ngarekobasáng accompanied them and stayed 3 days on Pelíliou without achieving anything.

When they returned home, a canoe from Ngariáp went with them and stayed 3 days in Ngrekobasáng. Yet again, the chiefs could not let the Ngariáp-people leave alone and sent along an accompanying canoe. Therefore, the Ngariapiáns also had to accompany them back home. In this fashion, they went back and forth and it looked like it would never end. When they went north the seventh time the two canoes from Ngariáp and Nagrekobasáng arrived at the two small islands Joulōmākáng and Bablōmākáng ⁴.

¹ the black and white striped mangerengér.

² kekeréi small, tói passage, in contrast to Klóultói, the big “passage”, see Vol. 1, story 17c.

³ see story 158.

⁴ see Vol. 1.

There, they intended to separate, but the people from Nagrekobasáng were still unable to go home. Now they sailed several times back and forth between the islands. Finally, the chiefs of Ngariáp decided to bestow the high title Gaspángĕl on the high chief of Nagrekobasáng. Thus, this title came to Nagrekobasáng and the two places had once again a good relationship.

Story 13. The Master Builder Gorágĕl And His Mother, the Snake Bersóiög.

log.: bai 1 W. pl. II^b, bai 9 III^b illustr. pl. XIV 12, bai 17 V^b illustr. d.-pl. 3f, bai 18 V^a d.-pl.3^c, bai 23 II^a d.-pl. 3^c, bai 35 III^a d.-pl. 3^d, bai 37 V^b, bai 38 III^a illustr., bai 80 e. illustr., bai 138 VII^a illustr. d.-pl. 3^e.

A woman in the village part Ngéóng of Ngabúkĕd, was pregnant and gave birth to the gongór-fruit of the pandanus on the grassland. She threw it out of the house; everyone was angry about it. Outside it rotted in the sun and the rain that carried it all the way down to the sea. There, in Ngúrang, some people of that settlement were fishing with deráu -handheld nets. They had caught the fruit in their nets several times, although they had always flung it far away.

Finally one of the fishermen put it in his basket and took it home. On the grassland he threw it away, and a tree developed from it. The tree gave birth to a bersóiög-snake ¹, which destabilized the area. One day, it devoured in Ngéóng the son of rubak nr. I, Ngauál. Then people of this settlement gathered and drove the snake away with their spears. It escaped to Górabag, a hill south of the isthmus a Gól, on the western side, and remained there. Just around this time a Rĕmĕsĕgāu, rubak nr. I from Ngaregobatáng came to a Gól in order to borrow money from Ngirameketí nr. II ². However, this one did not give him anything. When Rĕmĕsĕgāu wanted to continue on to Ngaregolóng, he warned him of the galíd Bersóiög in Górabag. Rĕmĕsĕgāu did not care about it and when he wandered over the isthmus of a Gól he was devoured together with his dugong-bracelet by the snake.: (see log. d.-pl. 3^c). After this event, people from a Gól chased the snake away, by lighting a fire underneath the tree, on which it stayed. The snake fled to Bertmák in Metĕulǒgól-Gólei, where she lived on the Delimĕs-fern of a miĕg-tree.

One day it dropped its scat into the canoe of rubak nr.1 Kiók, by the name Gareómĕl, that helped the canoe, because the rubak now caught a lot of fish with it. People asked: What may cause the canoe to have so much luck? — One day they found Rĕmĕsĕgāu’s bracelet in the dung, they discovered the Bersóiog, and chased her away with fire. She fled to Ngarameténgĕl in Ngaramlungúi and lived there in the channel Godararderóng on a delímĕs-fern tree, where she gave birth to her son Gorágĕl. He grew up quickly into a young man. Yet, when his mother devoured the son of Rüngŭl ra mogoáng the fight against her began anew and she escaped with her son to Cape a Usàs, at the entrance of the Ngát pang-Bay. One day a fishing canoe from Nggamaséd passed by and Gorágĕl asked the occupants to bring him to the southern side, which they did.

¹ According to information provided by rubak I, Bagés from Ulimáng, a Mdágāl, Meléngĕl, Ngiralebeī — Keklau, etc. Bersóiög, the mother of Goragĕl, supposedly was born by Dilĕdĕgú in Ngariáp. A great flood carried the grand mother, the mother and the child away and brought them to Ngaregobatáng in Keklau, where Rĕmĕsĕgāu was rubak I: he was the one, who found the three persons in the channel of Ngaramadlsár (bl. VIII Ulimáng). He brought them home, where he had a hot bath readied for them. First Bersóiög was washed, then Gorágĕl, which angered the old woman. When she was lying at the other end of the house, a young aukál'l-tree sprouted out of her body. People planted it outside with the following words: We thought it was a human being, but it is a tree. —When Diledĕgú had turned into a tree she stayed a few days with Rĕmĕsĕgāu then she went to Ngabúkĕd This explains the connection between tree and snake, and the sacredness of the ukál'l (see construction of a canoe, Vol 3.)

From Nagregolóng the trip went to Ngaraberúög in a Imelik and after a break there it continued in an old kaberúög-canoe to Ngarakeúkl on Peliliou and from there to Ngeaur. On the way the Bai building galíd was visited, etc.

² According to another information he was called Mong dĕráol.

is mother, bersóiög had made herself very small and in this fashion Gorágĕl carried her under his arm in the sheath of a coconut blossom. On the other side of Cape Madálabai ¹ he wanted to be dropped on the small island Gordĭlsāu and from there he walked to Pkurengĕl. As he was standing at the headland a canoe on its way from Medórĕm to Ngeaur passed by. He hailed it, but the people did not want to take him along. Therefore, he performed some magic that is named after him godensĕl ² a Gorágĕl. It is accomplished by sticking a blade of grass into the knot of hair and reciting the necessary saying while nodding the head. This makes you irresistible. People from Medórĕm at once took the boy with them and they rowed to Ngeaur, because in those days there still were no sails. The travelers stayed three days as klegădăol then they returned. On their way back, when they crossed the estuary Makăĕp, Gorágĕl suddenly heard some noise in the depth and asked his mother what this signified. Unnoticed she dropped her tail to the bottom of the sea and, while Gorágĕl, followed his mother’s orders and dove down, she held the canoe with her head.

He observed the spirits (ar ugel), they were busy building a bai and were just about to cut tenons into the beams of the frame.³ He asked them to teach him their craft. He saw how all of them blew away the sawdust with open eyes, so that it flew into their eyes, because they could not close them. Gorágĕl said: If you teach me the house building magic, then I will show you how to close your eyes, when you are blowing away the dust. — They agreed and showed him the house building magic of Geko godogŭl segăsĕg, he, in turn, taught them to close their eyes. Then he returned to the canoe, where his mother had been waiting longingly, as she had been holding it all the time against the power of the rowers. Now thoroughly exhausted she let him push her back into the coconut sheath ⁴.

The canoe went back to a Imelik and landed in Klsóbĕl, grassland nearby Ngarekeai. Gorágĕl walked with his sick mother to Ngát pang, but she died in Ngarbád l mángĕl, on the way to Melékéiok. He left the dead Bersóiĕg there and asked the birds terĭd, the rail, the White-browed crane sngórōg and the Purple swampphen vĕk to look after her, while he went to collect syrup for the funeral feast, the gameldĭl. Finally, when the feast had taken place, he enforced a tăor, a noise taboo of one month; this is why the three birds still today cry out at any noise. The white tern sogósōg had special orders to enforce the taboo. It belonged to Runguelau.

According to another version, the visit of Makaĕp took place on the way to Ngeaur and there Gorágĕl showed Golungĭs his craft (see story 170). From here the magic went to Ngiragalsákl, who spread the craft all over Palau.

Gorágĕl interred Bersóiög in Ngarbad l mángĕl and built a grave on top of it. Yet, when he felt unobserved, he stuck his hand into the ground, took the dead body out and brought it to Ngĕrupsáng, where he buried her in the stone platform of blai VIII Bersóiog that also got the name, because of this. From there Gorágĕl went to Ngĕramĕs on the beach of Melekéiok. There, people were just about to produce small bersákl-nets. He offered them to bring them to a good reef with a lot of fish, at the time of the next full moon. They agreed. In the meantime they visited the north. When he returned to Ngĕrames at the time of the full moon, people had already finished the nets. Together, they went far out at sea, all the way to the horizon, the ŭgul a iángĕd, where the water is overflowing just like from a full pot.

¹ see Cape Gomolúgel on map 3, latitude 29’.

² poss. of godĕl grass; compare comb gosond..

³ for the gad posts, the ometiĕt a ngălek, (not ometăet !).

⁴ On the way, Gorágĕl supposedly painted figures on the rocks of a Ulong, they are considered to be the onset of the Palauan logukl. He had received the most important tools for the construction of houses from the galid spirit, a ruler, a master ĕrabái, a pencil, made from the sheath of a coconut gósĕgôsu (respectively a cuttle bone lut from the cuttle fish and its ink) and the ash, gat, used as color to draw lines, etc., see also the ĕrabái for this story. Vol. 5, illustr. 5b.

There was a reef with a lot of soft mud, in which the bamboo poles of the fishermen got stuck, so that they had to make new ones again and again. Gorágěl said: Here you can fish! — Yet, the people of Ngërames got stuck there with their nets, as stars in the sky, they are known as Bersákl a riráměs. Gorágěl, however, went to supreme chief of heaven, Ugéliángěd, who was just hosting a feast. This one said to his people: Watch Gorágěl, when I am attending the feast that he should not go to the bathing pond behind the house. The children, though, did not watch. When Gorágěl took a bath he noticed that his soles turned into stone. a Ugél got very angry when he heard about this. He gave Gorágěl a lemon, kěřěkur raiderúrt, to plant it in Palau. He now went to Ngeaur and then up the west coast.

a Tkedlúkl, a man in Ngardebotár was cutting his palm trees, when Gorágěl saw him and asked him for a drinking nut, because his turning into stone made his throat hot. The request was granted and in return Gorágěl gave the man the lemon and told him to look well after the first fruit. Then he moved on. However, when he arrived on the island Gordılsau, the turning into stone gradually took over his entire body and he remained there as the rock Gorágěl, that can still be seen today south of the island.¹

a Tkedlúkl planted the lemon in Ngadebotár and a beautiful tree developed from it that soon bore fruits. The old man took good care. Yet, one day, when he went fishing he said to his wife Dira bakërús, she should take good care, and when she went to the taro field, she said to the children, should a lemon fall down, they should pick it up and place it into the cupboard. When the children were alone, the high-ranking woman Dir’rungūlbai from Ngarekeai arrived and brought two baskets of taro into the house to make a Tkedlukl’s son her son-in-law.² A lemon dropped in this very moment and the children got it. Since Dir’rungūlbai wanted to drink lemonade, they gave her the fruit. She cut it with a pearl shell; at the same time something rattled inside the lemon and when the woman looked closer, she discovered a lot of money in the cavity. Now she forgot about the marriage and soon left with the treasure. When a Tkedlúkl came home, he noticed immediately the missing fruit and the children told him what had happened. Now he waited for his wife and when she came he said to her: Tomorrow I will take you out to sea and drown you. — Dirabakërús ran to her mother Gobagád and told her everything. This one made some magic with ash and the blábuk-stick and she said: When your husband throws you into the water, hold on to the stick and scatter the ash. — She did as she was told and when her husband, with the help of two sons, had thrown her into the ocean, she scattered the ash. It soon clogged to a heap and formed the coral island Ngeiangěl. Now Dirabakerús collected all the wood available in order to make the islands bigger. When the trees grew, she gave birth to a boy and a girl, who grew up and married.

In the meantime a Tkedlúkl lived rather poorly with his two sons. One day when they were fishing, a gust of wind made them drift to Nggēiangěl. When they went on shore, they noticed a fire in a house. Since they were freezing, the old man sent his son, to get some fire. The mother recognized him and she made it warm for him. Then the old man sent the other one and this one, too, remained in the house and did not return. Then dying of cold a Tkedlúkl turned into a rock, which is still standing on the outside. Therefore, all inhabitants of Nggēiangěl are descendants of the woman Dirabakerús. Not long ago blai ra Tkedlúkl still stood in Ngardebotár. Now it is collapsed.

Story 14. The Story Of The Glowing Pearl Shells,
The Fish-Woman Dilĕtekú, The Land-Fisherman a Tmĕlógěd
And Ugér a roisáng (Ngiraidemai).

log.: bai 1 IV^b d.-pl. 4^a, bai 11 IX^a, bai 48 N. pl. II^c, bai 76 III^a, bai 81 I, bai 94 III^b, bai 99 E., bai 109 VII^b

¹ see the illustr. in Vol. 1, illustr. 40.

² This marriage is called omōg and it is the privilege of high-ranking women.

illustr. pl. IX^b, bai 113 IV^a, bai 121 VI^b, bai 131 VIII, bai 132
VIII, bai 145 IV^a, bai 146 IV^a; sea snake end: bai 24 VIII illustr. d.-pl. 3^d.

The two galid Gatitěl ¹ and Galimongál were cutting palm wine in Ngariélĕp on Goréör. One day, Galimongál went fishing to the Toágel míd and saw, at the place Ngaramutidég, a pearl shell emanating light through the opening. He tried to reach it, but it closed so that he could not find it any more.

He went home gathered some sticks and build on the spot a platform — called skokl — to observe the shell. He also told Gatitěl his adventure, this one had been supposed to meet him after cutting the palm trees, but arrived after the platform had been finished. The shell opened after sunset and it brightly shimmered in the depth. They dove down to it, caught it, and brought it home. After removing the flesh, the open shell illuminated the entire interior of the house as if it would be daytime. They considered to cover the entire settlement Ngariélĕp with a roof and to mount the shell as a sun on the ceiling. They created the mountains Ngurungevíkl, Ngeiángés, and Túkūr and the Gogeál-rocks. Then they fetched a portion from Nagregúr, which they wanted to place on top of the other. However, when they came in its vicinity galid spirit a Ugél kobasádĕl threw a burning coconut husk into the air, so that they thought that daybreak was nearing and they dropped their mountain which became the island Malágál.

Here another story blends in, which ends with mine. In KUB. 88 V pp. 59—64 the excerpt is the following: Gadabedei and Gersoi ², two brothers had a sister Oukimim ³, they lived in Ogwit ⁴. Gersoi quarreled with his brother and decided to emigrate. He hollowed out a large calophyllum-tree trunk (Btaches) and made in there 3 compartments, the front one for provisions, the middle one for the sister, the back one for himself. Then he prepared Auleld ⁵ from coconut kernel and syrup as supplies and was ready to leave. Gadabedei, however, discovered everything in the last moment, he jumped into the first compartment and placed the lid on top of it.

The tree-trunk drifted to the southwest, to the Ngkesól ⁶-reef, between Nggēiangel and Ngarególóng. When the shore was hit, the lid sprang open, and Oukimim was washed out of the canoe and was lost. Then the tree-trunk continued to drift into the direction of Golei. On the way, Semdiu from Ngarduais (close to a Irai), who was visiting his friend Tegógo ⁷ in Gólei, found it. Semdiu took the tree-trunk to Gólei with intent to shape from it the outrigger for his canoe. Yet, when he had received the money Tegógo owed him, he returned to Ngarduais and forgot about the piece of wood. However, this one pursued him of its own accord on the east coast, drifting outside the reef to the south. The tree-trunk tried to enter all the passages in the reef, yet, when trying to enter it always positioned itself crosswise and, therefore, had to drift onwards.

Finally it landed in Ngarduais where Semdiu’s people found it. He now gave the order to carve it for his canoe. But, when people were working on it, they suddenly heard voices from the inside and horror-stricken they reported this to Semdiu, who told them to continue their work, if human beings were inside, then they were his relatives, and if they were gods, they were his gods. Soon the two brothers Gadabedei and Gersói appeared with their Aulél and their palm juice. In due course they taught the Palauans how to prepare it.

¹ Name of a fish.

² KUB. Akapekémek and Kersoy, see story 193 about Tělámes.

³ aukim your pudend. muliebr. poss. 2: kim tridacna shell. Meaning?

⁴ KUB. adds here: (Palauan name for Uogóy or the Mogomok- [Makenzie]-Islands). The word comes, without any doubt from Vokeuid or Uĕkeuid “70 islands”, as Mógĕmog is called in Palau, see story 8 a. 10.

⁵ ulĕld, dish made from syrup and coconut.

⁶ KUB. Kossol.

⁷ KUB. Tahooko.

In the morning, when collecting his palm juice, Gadabedēi always found his coconut shells empty. He watched carefully and noticed at night a fish coming from the sea to the shore, taking off his fishtail and then, in the form of a human being, climbed the palm trees. Quickly he sized the tail and brought it into the house of Semdiu, where it was hung up. In the morning, when he returned to the place, he found a naked woman lying under the trees, who asked for an apron. He took her with him to his house, he learned her name Diletekú ¹, and married her. She gave birth to a daughter Merúpélau, who grew into a beautiful girl.

One day, the chiefs from Madál in Goikúl and Ngarduaïs came to visit. She was supposed to entertain them. Diletekú sent her daughter to Semdiu to fetch the taro pounder that she could not find and when she returned with the message that it was in the ulangáng — the shrine, she went there and noticed the suspended fishtail. In this moment she felt a great longing for her watery homeland. She advised her daughter to serve the father and at night she disappeared into the sea with the tail. Since the fishtail had become too light because it had dried, she exchanged it with the one of the Karamasim-fish ². Thus, she soon reached her old home-country in the depth.

My recordings continue like this:

Around this time, the palm wine-cutter Gadabedēi ³ lived in Ngarduaïs and he managed to steal the glowing pearl-shells in Ngariélëp. One day, when he discovered that his palm-wine had been drunk, he looked carefully around and found the tail of a tekú-fish, an Albacore-Yellow Tail on the ground. He carried it home and hung into the smoke. Shortly afterwards, when he came back, he found a woman prostrated on the ground. He took her home and kept her. The other fish-women had escaped. Diletekú gave birth to a daughter, Merú pélau. One day her mother discovered her fishtail and escaped with it into the sea. Due to the smoking process it had become too light, therefore she said to the boxfish karamasīs: Give me your tail! — He, however, said: What am I supposed to do with a dry tail? — Then Diletekú replied: Good, then I will give you two góngolungél-litters⁴ in front and two in the back. Then the crabs will come and carry you, if you want to reach deep water. — Then the boxfish gave her his tail and she swam into the depth.

Soon afterwards Merú pélau went north with the luminous shells, but she arrived too late for the feast in Ngabúkëd, so that she could not sit in the circle of rubak. Therefore, she scattered some ash and sat on it. Soon, the land underneath her started raising, and in a short time she sat high in the air and could watch the kikeruâu-feast.

This was the moment when rubak Bangai from Ngarietët ⁵ saw her and she delighted him so much, that he sent a messenger and asked her to become his wife. She agreed at once to travel with him to his place. His way led through the water. She asked: How come you always walk through water; wait a moment I will arrange matters. — She took some ashes, said a magic spell, and then scattered them. This caused the surrounding land to rise and they could walk over land ⁶.

So Merúpélau lived in Ngarietët while the children of Gobagád prepared the land of Galáp, (see story of Galáp) But one day, Merúpélau and Bangai had fight and she escaped to Galáp, in order to return to Ngarduaïs. There on the stone path (ugulagáng) Ugér a roisáng was just beating coconut baste. He asked her where she was going to. She said: To a Iraï. He said: Wait a little bit!

¹ KUB. adds Δίλα9uguō: (djuguu a young Kersuuk Coryphaena) more correct tekú and gersúōg; daughter.

² The boxfish Ostracion, see below.

³ see story 193.

⁴ The boxfish has two horns in front that look carrying sticks, see story 182 b.

⁵ north of Bay Ptilërang on the mountain of a Gól.

⁶ see story 58 about Gobagád. The raised land was Ked a Iruáng, it connected Ngabúkëd and Galáp, which had been separated beforehand.

— Because he liked her. He invited her to come home with him and asked for her hand. She accepted, married him, and gave birth to a son, a Tmëlógöd ¹.

In Ngurú lemuóng, she gave her pearl shells to the palm-cutters of her husband ², who lived there. The boy grew up quickly. Soon he got his own way and was allowed to bring the palm-cutters in Ngurúlemuóng their food. The father Ngira rois did not want to allow him, because the gleaming pearl shells were there in the house. He wanted to save them from the boy. Therefore, he made the condition that the boy was supposed to make some noise when he was coming closer with the food. This allowed people in the house to hide the pearl shells. His mother also reprimanded him not to forget it.

Since the boy wanted to know the reason, but was not told, one day he did not make himself conspicuous when coming closer to the house and he saw the gleaming pearl shells. He delivered the food, went home, and soon complained to his father that he had seen something so beautiful that he wanted to have it. First Ngirarois was angry with his son, but soon he complied. He fetched one of the pearl shells, cut a piece out of it and fashioned a fishing hook from it for a Tmëlógöd. Now he fished everyday with it in the sea from the bridge Ngarapesóng ³. Yet, when he came home, the first thing his father always did, was to take away the line and the hook from him, before he accepted the fish.

Then one day, it happened that a big fish, a Gold makrele dolphin-fish, took the hook and bit off the line. Angry the boy returned home, and when Ngirarois realized the loss of the hook, he scolded his son a great deal. He threw his fish-basket into a corner and shouted: Do you think, you a big guy here, that such things could happen to you. I picked up your mother on the beach! — Saddened a Tmëlógöd went to the galid spirit-woman Gobagádra Tegeïëbai ⁴ and asked for her advice. She said: Bring me some ash and a blabuk ⁵; I will say some magic over it; then throw the ash into the sea at the spot, where you lost the hook; then throw yourself in it, together with the garamál-stick, and search for the hook!

¹ KUB. A9molóko9, father Augel a Royša ”the first one on Roisang”; the chiefly title Molób is the name of rubak VI in Galáp. KUB. V p. 61, gives information about the reason and the path on this journey (everything in rectangular braces is my addition): “Then it happened that the land Ngarbukud (Ngabukëd) celebrated a rubak; the chiefs of Ngarduaïs all went there and Ameriul pélau (Merú pélau) also wanted to go there, but all vehicles had already left. Therefore, she bundled her apron and ran overland to Ngoršúl (Ngarsúl), where she took a rest in Ngotogúyul (rock-cape Ngurugúiel) then she ran on the sea shore via Taperngesang (Cape Taprengësang) Ngaru9oy (Island Ngurutói), Aybay (Ngarupešnag) a Ibaï landing place in Ngërupesáng to orangol in Molegoyók (Ngërang gol (?) in Melekéiok), from where she swam over to Ngiwal and hurried along the beach, that had just been freed from high tide. She hurried via Kekláu to Galáp (. . .) where she dressed and went to Ngarbúku9. On the way she picked up two small stones with which she played and when she arrived at the destination of her trip, she found Bai Aruau (Bai rë ruaï) filled and there was no space for her on the pavement in its surrounding area. Therefore, she sat down on her two small stones and they soon began to grow, so that she sat as high as the others. All people from Ngarbúku9 people marveled at her and many chiefs wanted to marry her. She, however, lent Ardyál from Ngaritéd an ear and became his wife. One day, when she worked here in her taro patch, her husband’s nephew came back from fishing and showed her his catch, consisting of several fish and a not much valued dmay (dmai). Now she said this may should be put aside for her and then she continued working, until evening. When she came home very tired, she learned that her husband had eaten the dmay. She did not say a word, but she refused to eat anything else and when all of them were asleep she left the house, in order to return to Ngarduaïs. However, in Galáp she met a Ugel a Royša, who had the chiefly title Molób. He convinced her to stay and to become his wife”. — The flight because of the fish seems to be based on totemic reasons.

² Today a stone-pot by this name is still in Galáp.

³ According to KUB. at the tip of the stone barrage Ngarabosō.

⁴ according to KUB. he first talks with his mother, who went to Adalál Obaka9 in order to look for help. Tgeïëbaï(I also wrote Tegeïkëbai) supposedly was also a blai in Galáp; the woman I of this place is even today still called Gëbi ra Tegeïëbaï. More about Gobagád, see Ngabúkëd and story 58; see the stone in Galáp.

⁵ KUB. ash and a little bit of Karamal-wood; yet, it was a blabuk-stick made of hibiscus.

— The boy did as he was told; he threw himself into the sea and arrived at the beautiful place ¹ Ngëdíp. He sat down at head of the stone path and saw a group of women coming to fetch water. He asked them about where to and why and they told him Diletekú was lying very sick at home and they wanted to bathe her in hot water. Then he said: aúdōgúl ma gëuid. Hearing these words, the woman returned to Diletekú, and reported everything. She ordered them bring a Tmëológöd; he entered the house at the opposite end. When the old woman saw him, she immediately recognized the similar looks of the boy and her daughter. Come here she called: He came to the corner where she was resting and asked: ”What is wrong with you?” — She replied: I ate some food that came from above. It got caught in my throat²! He said: This is my hook! He had her open her mouth, put the blabuk-stick in it, and took the hook out ³.

She asked him about his origin and he told her, he was Merúpélau’s son. The old woman cried when she heard how her daughter had been humiliated. Then Diletekú said: Take the hook, go above and when you are up there, when you are fishing, you say: I want to have a bunch of bananas on the line! Then you reel in! — Hereupon the boy returned to his home country and started again to fish from the canoe. When he reeled in the line, there really was a bunch of bananas ⁴ attached to it, another time almonds with syrup, etc. All this was sent by his grandmother. Some time later, when he cast the hook at night, he shouted: If only there would be land attached to it, so that I have a place of my own. — Just then there/it was a flood/high tide. Then his hook got stuck at the bottom. He called his friends to help him, but reprimanded them to keep quiet. Thus, they all pulled at the line together.

Soon treetops appeared, then came the land itself. The men pulled more and more of it to the surface. However, they did not wait until everything was finished, but they jumped on top of it and took possession of nearly all of it, so that a Tmëológöd only got only blai Ibedagáng and a Idelëgëdeî ⁵ that still is in the possession of his family. He gave the hook to his father, who left it with the palm cutters. Nobody knows where it went then. Tmëológöd was angry with his father. When he had planted the land he had reeled in, he ordered all animals, as the crabs, etc. and the trees to look out for his plantation. He said to them: Take good care; when my father comes and even takes one leaf, we will chase him away. — One day Ugéraroisáng ⁶ was at the beach, when a heavy downpour occurred. Thus, he went into the plantation and cut off one banana-leaf, in order to use it as an umbrella.

Yet, as soon as he had done this, all trees and animals made a terrible noise, so that the old man ran away quite shocked. He turned to the north, first to the house a Idemāi in Ngabiúl, then to Gólei. However, he did not stay there, instead he continued his journey and came again to Ngabiúl. There, he met an old woman from the house a Idemāi, who was collecting pandanus leaves as thatch for her roof.

¹KUB. the land Adaḡk (see story 1). Further on, it is written there: »On the way the fish came to meet him, and since he was chewing betel nut, he took it out of his mouth and he gave a bit to some of them. In this manner they got red spots on the mouth, which can be seen at many of them. Others asked him, where he was going to and he answered by shouting impatiently ṣwalék [sualek my basket!]. Doing this the chewed betel nut sprayed out of the mouth and colored the bodies of the fish red (all kinds of holocentrum). Only the one of the [dudálem green lip-fish] followed him to the land Adáḡk. Both of them sat at the spring, when some girls arrived«. —

² gëókl the stopper of the pharynx; in fact the T shaped fish hook

³ KUB.: ”and because dudálem, who accompanied Admolókod, was behaving very strangely and because he was dancing, the old woman started laughing, which caused a big fishing hook to fall out of her mouth” . . .

⁴today a red kind of omuit pesengél still grows in Galáp and it is identified as the banana of Tmëológod.

⁵Blai I and II of Galáp; another informant mentioned Itegededeṽ, Ngaruerdú bl. 12 and Teregëšíp bl. 14; here the stone, in which the hook had gotten stuck.

⁶That he and galid spirit Medegeṽpélau are one and the same, can be deduced from story 197 about the last one.

She was thirsty. He stamped with his foot on the ground and at once a spring developed ¹, from which she drank. Then he carried her bundle of leaves home Ugéraroisáng wanted to become her child. Therefore, he removed all water sources from the neighborhood of the house. He only left some in a kim-shell standing in front of the door. When the old woman was once again thirsty and looking for water Ugéraroisáng quickly turned into a mosquito larvae, which swam in the Tridacna shell. When the woman saw the water she drank it all. Soon the rumor started that the old woman was pregnant and a short time later she gave birth to aboy who quickly grew up. When he went along fishing and the catch was distributed he did not get the gai-shellfish, then he urged them again and again for a new distribution until he finally had it. Then he cooked it and brought it together with some taro to the council of the chiefs Ngarilíd; he, however, wanted to keep the head ². Finally, he kept the entire gai for himself and therefore, it is still today considered sacred for the galid spirit Ngiraidemaî and he belongs to blai a Idemāi. In Galáp, a Tmëológod turned into a mangerengér-sea snake. Even today he is still called Ngiraptelulagáng ”master of the head of the trail” and he is the galid of blai Telegëdeî.

Story 15. The Children Of Lild(Thin Bamboo) — Ngalekél a lild.

There is another story about Tmëológöd: On the land Ngaremonge-lóng ³ next to blai Bedél, situated in a corner of the big stone path of Galáp, stood a lot of lild-bamboo. Every morning, four children came out of the undergrowth and fought in pairs with the bamboo against each other. Ugér a roisáng sent his son Tmëológod to look who was causing this noise. But before he arrived, they had already disappeared into the undergrowth. He told his father that he only found broken bamboo on the way. Then the old man ordered him to hide and watch what was happening. This the boy did. When the four children were playing again, Tmëológöd stepped out and asked them where they belonged. They replied: Here!

— Where is your house? he continued asking. They replied: We live in the bamboo! — He reported this to his father, who told him to play again with the children on the next day and then to have a look at their house. The boy did this, but he only saw bamboo. When Ugér a roisáng heard this, he decided to blow the Triton horn shell, to encircle the bamboo with his men, to dig it up and to throw it into the sea, so that the galid-children would be scattered and could no longer cause any mischief.

This is what happened. One part of the bamboo drifted to Uli máng, one part to Mangal’lang, another one to Melekeî ⁴, after its destruction the inhabitants took refuge in a Iraî. According to another information the lizard (see bai 88 II^b and V^a) made spears out of bamboo and gave them to the rainbow (Gorekím) with the following words: ”Have a fight!” The weak ones were sent out and driven back by the Galáp-people. The bamboo was dispersed and thrown into the ocean.

This short story is not without importance. In KUB. II, p. 121 it is written, that Mangal’lang, Ulimáng, Galáp, Nggësár and a Iraî call themselves Ngalekél a lild as the original relatives. It is explained there in detail that these children developed in Ngaregolóng, at the place Delbodk next to Mangal’láng that is today’s uninhabited village Delbóng, also mentioned in story 16.

¹according to KUB. called Ngatakomátak.

² KUB. V, p. 65: Yet, Irademay always announced that he had super natural ancestry. He demanded from all fishermen to receive the ghay-fish, and when he sent this to the chiefs into the bai, he demanded the head for his mother. Yet, when he was in the vehicle with the chiefs and there was bad weather that only he knew to pacify, he remained seated on the Dosomel (the outrigger), the most distinguished seat. Due to similar events people came to believe that he was a kalid, and they accepted him as such.

³Maybe the same as the land Ngurulemóng or lemuóng in story 14.

⁴from Ngarsúng, see story 136.

Because of their high spirits thy infuriated the entire district and had to flee. One part drifted to the east, another one to Nggësár, where Bokháp (obviously rubak V Bagáp) had already control over the land, a third party funded *aIraĩ*¹, other splinter groups settled in Galáp and Ulimáng.

Also ”the god of war Horgim, honored in the entire group”, supposedly had his origin in Ngatméł, where he emerged when a bamboo pole was cut (see KUB. V 48). More about Gorekim, this god of war in Vol. 3.

Story 16. The Story About Ugélsúng, The Death Crab Gaulauoságäl, And The Sailing Race For The Ngas-Twig.

log. about the death crab: bai 4 I plate III^a, bai 17 IV^a, bai 33 VI^b, bai 37 IV^b, bai 50 VII^a illustr. d.-pl. 4^b, bai 68 IV^b, bai 88 V^b, bai 97 VI, bai 99 E., bai 112 III^a, bai 118 VII^b illustr. d.-pl. 4^b, bai 119 II^a illustr aqu., bai 121 II^b, bai 125 I, bai 126 II^b, bai 130 V^a, bai 139 VII^a pl. XI^b, bai 151^{bc}, see also A. B. MEYER’ 81 pl. 3 row 3. about the race: bai 6 II^a, bai 7 IV^a, bai 16 VIII, bai 19 VI, bai 25 V^a, bai 33 II^a, bai 35 V^b, bai 54, bai 69 IV^b, bai 71 VI^a, bai 74 II^b, bai 75 II^a, bai 76 III^b, bai 77, IV^a, bai 79 II^a, bai 80 VII^b, bai 83 V^b, bai 88 III^b, Bai 89 VII^a, bai 91 V^a, bai 102 V^a, bai 115 I, bai 118 VI^b illustr., bai 120 VIII illustr. d.-pl. 4^c, bai 129 VIII, bai 134 VIII, bai 136 IV^b, bai 137 VI^b, bai 140 IV^b pl. XII^b, bai 141 VI^a, bai 143 IV^b, bai 144 II^b, bai 147 I, bai 148 IV^b, bai 150 IV^a, bai 151 IV^a, further on see KUB. VIII pl. 42^s.

Karakár, the daughter of Ugélsúng’s sister in Ngarsúng near *a Iraĩ*¹, was pregnant. Since it was the first time she was expecting a child they assigned her a ulangáng-spirit house. The father of the child was a man called Gosilék from the nearby village Ngërulák. But this was a secret, because he did not dare to propose, because Karakár was so rich. He always came secretly at night to visit her and left again before daybreak. One day, he fetched his fishing baskets and found them filled with ngiáog-fish. He threw them into the canoe, which was filled with water so they could swim. There they fought each other and one hit the other one from the side, so that he died, then he hit him from the other side, so that he woke up again. When Gosilék noticed this, he decided to kill Karakár in this manner. In the evening he went to her and secretly hit her from one side, and then he went home again. Next morning, the young woman’s mother sent some children to wake her up.

The small ones returned and told her that Karakár would not wake up. The old woman sent the children once more, telling them to lift the mat and look at the sleeping woman. Then they returned and reported that Karakár was dead. The mother was very sad and cried. All the people of the village came to see the deceased, who was lying in state in the middle door of the house. Until evening the woman wailed their lament, then the body was brought to the cave Itumrúkl ¹, so that galid spirit Galauoságäal could fetch her there. When Gosilék heard this, he took a canoe and, in the company of his two younger brothers, went to the cave Itumrúkl. Arriving there he told his two companions to hold the canoe, while he climbed to the cave. He found the body, took it with him to the canoe and loosened her mat-clothing and hit her on the other side, so that she awoke. Surprised Karakár asked how she had gotten there. Then he told her: Your mother killed you and brought you to the cave! — Then the woman became angry with her mother and she said: Good, then I will become your wife, your relative, in short I want to be yours altogether. —

Afterwards, they both sailed to Ngërulák. Gosilék placed his wife into a spirit house. Her relatives did not know anything of her and she always went bathing in the morning and in the evening. Yet there, a palm-wine-cutter up in his coconut tree saw her. He went to her relatives in Ngarsung and cried: You are mourning her, yet she lives! I have seen her in Ngërulák! — I might be mistaken, but you must know her. Do have a look!

¹ gëbirukl bended; female bodies were deposited there, men were thrown into the water.

— Thus, the mother went to see her. When she came to the spirit house, and saw her, she said: My daughter if you want to marry Gosilék, why did not tell me. You were dead, and I brought you to Itumrúkl! — Yet, Karakár was angry, she took a small mat that was designed for her child, placed it on top of her head and went crying to the water hole ralm a Karakár in Ngërulák and dove down. Her mother went crying after her and did not find her. Karakár swam away underneath the earth and at low tide she came up outside of the mangroves. She went to the east following the coast all the way to Ngësang nearby Galáp. There she sat down on a rock to dry her dress. Rubak a Guóng from Ngësáng saw her sitting there and admired her beauty. He offered her to come with him into his house. She followed him and soon the marriage festivities were celebrated, although nobody knew where she came from.

After some days she gave birth to a boy, who was named Goukobókop. He soon grew into a young man. One day, he played with spears when one of the spears slid away and flew all the way into the middle of the chiefs’ meeting. Then a Guóng became angry and shouted: What are you doing here? I picked your mother up on the beach! — He went and asked Karakár: Where do we belong to? — She, however, did not want to reveal it, and only when he was about to hit her, she said: Our place is not in Ngarsúng, in Jóludaob. — Now she told him everything that had happened, also in much detail she talked about the customs and traditions in her family. Goukobókop memorized everything very well and he said to his fellow club members: Let us hold a galbákl-tribunal, we want to visit Jouldáob!

— So it happened. First they slept in Goukúl, then they sailed to *a Iraĩ*¹, where his companions wanted to sell the dish. Yet, Goukobókop urged them on to Ngarsúng. When they anchored there, the boy went to the stone-seat, the ptangg of his uncle, in front of the blai a Jélag. There he sat down. This surprised the people in the house. The uncle Ugelsúng was flabby and most of the time he was lying on his mat. He said: Leave it, we will see what kind of person he is!

— Then they called him inside. The old man sat in the ugul-side ¹ of the house. While the others entered through the rsél-door under the tip of the beam, the boy entered through the middle door. The old man immediately noticed the resemblance with his niece Karakár. He remarked: Maybe she did not die and this is her son! — They cooked their food and talked with him. In the evening Ugélsúng said: I have no betel nut chew, someone should give me one! — The boy said: I will give you one.

— Everyone shouted: How do you know how he wants it prepared? — He, however, took a loop made from a rope, and the kikói-pearl shell, in order to cut the stalks. Then he placed the loop around his feet and climbed the right búög-palm. Everyone was surprised and shouted: How is this possible! — Then the old man asked for the betel-leave. Once again the young man said: I will bring you one! — and all were once again surprised and paid close attention. He, however, went to the correct bush fetching the right hollow leaves, which the old man normally used. When this one saw, how the boy knew everything, he said to himself: He has to be my nephew!

—The next day, Ugélsúng said: There is not enough firewood here! — At once the boy said: I will fetch some. Once again, everyone was surprised how he knew where the adze was, etc. Then he chopped only three bent sticks, as it was the local custom. He brought them into the house and placed them into the fire. Now Ugélsúng was sure. In the evening he said to the boy: Send your friends to the shore, I have to talk to you — When they were alone, the old man asked the boy and this one told him everything about his mother. Good, said Ugélsúng, but do not yet tell anyone.

¹ The root-side of the gorongódel beam, which is placed along on top of the doors

I am old and feeble; go back to your mother and quickly return, because you will be my successor. I will give you a galebúgép-piece of money for your galbákl-tribunal. Take it home with you and soon come back, because I am old and feeble and will die soon. Tell Káarakar, that it was not her mother but Gosilék who killed her and that we, when we had found her dead, did everything to give her a good burial!

Goukobókop and his comrades returned to Ngēsáng where he told his mother everything; then he went back to Ngarsung. People said: What does he want again? — Yet, Ugélsúng remained silent and secretly initiated the boy into the laws of the title and into the customs and traditions of the house. He said: When I die, transport me in a kabekl-canoe to Itumrúkl. People in the canoe have to try to deliver me to the Galauoságál-crab. You as the last one take the trunk of a banana plant with you and a bunch of young coconuts, immerge with both of them at the hull of the canoe.

When you no longer see my copse ¹, let go off the banana stem and the bunch of young coconuts, emerge on the outrigger side, between the float and the hull of the canoe. Then sit down on the outrigger and blow the conch shell, so that everybody knows that you are Ugélsúng. In case they want to spear you, they will only hit the stem and the nuts. Then, when you come and when people do not spread a telutáu -mat for you in order to walk on it, do not care because our galid spirit will give you some. When you come into the house of mourning and when you walk out of the middle of the house and they do not give you any food, then you should not be angry, because our galid will give you some. When you finished grieving and you want to sit on your stone-seat, you talk to them:

ptangg, ak mon Ugélsung ng diak?
stone-seat, I am yours Ugelsung, or not?

then it will answer you ói. These were Ugélsúng’s teachings. When he had passed away, Goukobókop did everything in this manner. It happened just like the old man had presumed: The chiefs and the family in Ngarsung did not want to acknowledge Goukobókop as their leader. The rubak hosted a sailing competition ² in order to identify their real high chief; it was to be the one who first brought home a branch of the Casuarina, of the ngas, from Nggeiangěl, he was supposed to become Ugélsúng. Now the rubak cut down ukal ‘l-trees to build canoes for the race. Only Goukobókop cut down a titíměl-tree, which had grown from a kernel, the fruit of which his mother had eaten.

Everybody laughed about him, because it was decaying tree and not very light ³. He worked little on it, because his galid spirit worked for him during the night. One day, people asked the reputed Ugélsúng when they should sail and he said: After tomorrow. — Now they really had to hurry and actually could not quite finish it. Still they all started; among the sailors was also the galid of Delbóng nearby Mangal‘láng, who had the stone of the mast in his canoe that is now lying in Mangal‘láng. In addition participated Medegeîpélau with the canoe Gobakul and a Nggei with the canoe Gogadú from Nggasagang. From Peliliou there was the galid spirit *a*Guóděl with the canoe Tukekli and Remádlëgalid with the canoea Galáuad. Goubókop, whose galid spirit helped him in all matters, was the first one to arrive in Nggeiangěl and took the ngas-ironwood twig.

¹ This means when the crab has accepted the body. The one from whom it accepts it becomes the successor of the title holding chief. In case several men had plunged into the water and if the body was not accepted, then it is brought back into the village, where it is interred. Then the oldest brother or the son of the sister becomes chief.

² called blutëk from omlútëk ”to race” Ngaregëu ě; in KUB. V, p. 30 and in SEMP. II, p. 157, this story is reported without the previous, though very crippled.

³ In SEMP. the reason for the race has been misunderstood, as the victor should become king of Kreiangel. In his version, the rubak then took heavy trees, while clever Kalid searched for half eaten wood, which he hollowed out, and covered with light bulrush. Then, during the journey the wind lifted his light canoe and carried it over the mountains.

With the help of his servants he pushed his canoe on shore, covered it with the leaves of the tórō-bind weed and ordered the white ants ¹ to cover it completely, so that it could not be recognized. Rightfully, he feared that, because of his cunning and his velocity, his competitors might destroy his canoe.² Therefore, the others did not find it and all of them slept at night in Nggeiangěl. The following morning, when the rubak looked over the water, Ugélsúng’s red sailing canoe was already anchored there; early in the morning the galid spirit had pushed it down there. He suggested to the chiefs to set off and allowed them to leave; then he quickly caught up with them and was the first one in Ngarsúng. There he planted the ngas-ironwood twig high up on top of the rock Rětäg of the Gogeal Ngerëam, where the Casuarina-tree can still be seen today. Still the race was still not yet finished.

They still had to sail south to Peliliou and Ngeaur. There was galid spirit with utoug-hooks, which hooked sails and rigging and ripped them apart. Because of this the passage between the islands Ngesebús and Ngaregu (also written Nergói) was especially feared and was therefore also called Toi ra mǎlát a ěárs, the “passage, where the sails tear”³. However, Ngelsúng had already learned from his uncle, that this place was best met by sailing with ten sheet ropes instead of one. In this manner he was well prepared. Now, when the canoes, all of them in addition loaded with clay pots, passed this spot, the galid spirit were positioned on both sides with their hooks and broke the sheet ropes and the sails; Ugélsúng was the only one who managed to pass tolerably well. All the other ones came through the big passage with broken rigging and demolished pots to the flat land Desóměl ⁴, between Ngardolólók and Ngasiás. Still today it is known as Goleúl klügös⁵, the place for hooking the sheet ropes.

Even today you can still see there countless broken pieces thrown over board by passing canoes. Ugélsúng sailed with his pots to a Ngeaur, there he sang out all the titles, and this is the reason why there are so many Ugél there. From there he supposedly sailed to the horizon Ugu la iángěd, and nobody heard anything from him ever since. Finally, some others thought he had returned to Ngarsúng and during this trip perforated the gogeál-wall of Ngerëam, thus, creating the Gongolúngěl-gap. This concept leads to a combination with Medegei pélau that can be found in story 197. KUB. V, p. 30 tells us the following:”When they reached the passage between Ulóng and Urukdjapel, a vicious god created a storm and ripped their sail-sheet-ropes apart, so that they could not continue. Yet, Augél Sum had seven of them and arrived in Pililu with the help of the last one”.

He came home with the broken twig and during his trip had to survive a lot of unpleasant events. Reaching Eyrray, he took a short cut and sailed right through a rock face, today it is still standing detached and is called Aytumrúkul. Today, when the weather is very stormy, the natives still use the passage that was created in this manner. The passage where the hostile kalidjs destroyed the ropes of the sails of the arriving people is, therefore, called Aklemadjáol, this means “the passage of the sailing sheet ropes”. —The Itumrúkl passage is now the Gongolúngěl-channel, the government had it excavated at the place of the former isthmus; the cave Itumruk1 is situated nearby on the eastern side. The Toi ra klemadáol is confused with the above mentioned one, because klemadáol means construction of stones, and not sheet rope.

Story 17. The stories of

a) Tipětíp a kmíëg ⁶, Góbak ra ibedagál, b) Góbak ra ilámës, c) Gosilék, and d) the Frog King.

log. about Típětíp: bai 24 II^b, illustr. d.-pl. 4^c, bai 35 IV^b illustr. d.-pl. 4^d, bai 63 S., bai 68 S., about Góbak ra

⁴ KUB. reports the canoe was hollowed out by white ngal-ants, which made it lighter, than the others

¹ The place of the one who looses his canoe in a race, cannot be copied during sickness by a so-called kěongěl-sickness-canoe, see medicine

² at the northern headland of Peliliou, inserted on map 2 in-between Ngesebús and Peliliou

³ the “float” of the outrigger.

⁴ goleül a place where you can have something, respectively hook something; klügös a. kluged, word for klemát-sheet.

⁵”Collecting almonds”. kmiëg is not quite understandable, as Terminalia catappa is only called miëg. Probably the Polynesian talie is decisive, the first syllable of which is otherwise omitted.

ilámēs: bai 21 VI^b, bai 25 VI^b, bai 51 VI^b, bai 83 VI^b, bai 94 VIII illustr. pl. XIV 9, bai 99 II^a, bai 107 I, bai 127 II^b, bai 128 W., bai 151 V^a d.-pl. 4^f, about Golsilék: bai 1 E. pl. II^a, bai 2 VI^b, bai 11, VI^a, bai 16 VII^b, bai 21 II^b, bai 25 I., bai 36 IV^b, bai 38 VI^a, bai 48 N., pl. II^c, bai 49 V^b, bai 51 V^b, bai 55 III^a, bai 65 VI^b, bai 69 VII^b pl. V^b, bai 80 IV^a, bai 96 VII^a, bai 99 IV^b, bai 118 II^b illustr. d.-pl. 5^a, bai 120 III^b, bai 127 II^b d.-pl. 4^e, bai 129 V^a, bai 131 VII^a, bai 133 II^a pl. IX^d, bai 140 III^a pl. XII^a, bai 142 IV^b, bai 144 VI^b, bai 151 III^a d.-pl. 4^f, Frog King: bai 52 V^b illustr. d.-pl. 5^d, bai 140 V^a.

17a. Típētīp a kmiēg.

Once upon a time, Dile dēgú ¹ and her brother Sagageiegáng ² lived as spirits in Ngariáp on Peliliou in the southern part of the Palauan archipelago. There they are still called upon today as the inventors and the executers of the gólei-magic. However, they did not stay long there; they moved around Palau. It is said they moved up the eastern coast together. First they stayed in Ngaramediú, where they sized the famous piece of money bágēl Tap ra mediú. Yet, here Kerengókl, as she was called from now on, sent her brother onwards with the words: mókēs ē vēs ”goodbye”. Then, present-day people of Melekéiok lived on the high gogeál-rock Ngaramediú, the southern cape marking the entrance into the harbor of Malagál.

Yet, the centipedes gēvūl harassed them, finally they grew so tall that they fed on human beings. Therefore, people started to fear them and emigrated. The only human being left behind was the girl Kerengókl. She was called Típētīp a kmiēg, because she was so poor that she had to collect miēg-tropical almonds to earn a living. In addition, she ate also raw taro, since people then did not know how to light a fire. Soon the girl also left and moved up the eastern coast of Babldáob. In Melekéiok she visited her companions of Ngaramediú and lived some time on the place Bab l kéd. Then she went to Ngatmél on the northern end of the island. From here she walked at low tide across the dry isthmus Magédagei ³ to the island Ngaregúr, in order to look here for almonds, too. One day, she saw there two galuāis-trees rubbing against each other in the wind, so that smoke started to rise and sparks were flying ⁴.

She shoved her taro into the glowing embers and after some time, when she took it out, it was roasted and tasted excellent. In this way, she invented cooking. After roasting her taro for a while in this fashion, she took dry branches of galuāis and gosēkēd dye fig trees and tried herself to light a fire. She put one piece on the floor and standing on it twirled a second one with both hands. In this manner she managed to light a fire. One day, when Kerengókl was busy cooking, a man by the name of Ngiraikikimói suddenly appeared. He came from the islands in the northeast, from Mógēmog, called Ukeuíd — the “70 islands”

mē kebedógēl lómsaubukl

— me kemsúr mo gorōdi ⁵

mo gorōdi me kemsúr —

You fulfill the gómsaubukl.

— You bring close, bring it quick

bring it quickly, bring close —,

¹ dēgu or dōgú is the hen, (see Ngariáp on Peliliou). Her children supposedly are the tēmakaṯ-grouper fish and the ukal ’l-tree (see canoebuild-ing). Incidentally, the Peliliou-people deny that Típētīp and Diledōgú are one and the same person; see also story 61 Ngirakloutáog.

² see story 215 about Bars ra kesaṯ.

³ gedor geṯ. Northern adventure.

⁴ in KUB. I p. 47, at the end of the myth of the deluge (see Milad story 19, etc.): “The same Obagat created also the fire. He saw an old woman, whose mouth was disfigured by ugly ulcers; he learned this was caused by food and that all people were seriously affected because they had to eat fish and taro raw. Then the benevolent spirit took pity on the people and he taught the woman how to light a fire by rubbing two sticks against each other”. Obagat is Gobagád.

⁵ from orégēd “to be quick” WALL., when teaching it Típētīp omitted these two lines in-between the hyphens

l kodobengi ¹ úgei

a komangēti ² ureúl

a komangēti ureúl l kodobengi úgei

l mo ra Peliliou ra geilagáng

take (a short space) in front,

and a long space in the back,

make it long in the back, and short in front

to Peliliou today.

Kerengókl moved again from Ngaregúr back to Ngatmél and then over land to the south, to the mountain a Réngēd, in the vicinity of Mangal’láng. There, she encountered two spirits of the grassland, galid ra kéd, by name of a Tpala pálag ³ and Tāgaduiau, who are considered the inventors of the practice to shoot pigeons ⁴ with bow and arrow. However, it seems likely they learned the art from their mother Gobagád. Today people still pray to her in the following manner:

Gosbedél a kéd

ak oltúruk rekau a Gobagáng

kau ma Ngirukuám

a ked ē mo oltóbēd ⁵ r tial longélngēléd ⁶

losik ⁷ ra geimól belógēl l bēlongá ⁸ rengi

“Opening of the Grassland”.

I announce to you, Gobagád,

you and Ngirukuám,

we want to abandon this our carrying stick,

and are looking for a decoy pigeon, in order to bring to her,

your child Kerengókl;

she is here hungry;

You fulfill the gómsaubukl.

— You bring close, bring it quick mo gorōdi me

bring it quickly, bring close —,

take (a short space) in front,

and a long space in the back,

make it long in the back, and short in front

to Peliliou today.

yet, still tell to Tiubúkl and Tamát,

they should take Keruau l buk l with them to his savanna on the west side, me lobenterir ¹⁵

they take him with them in order to tie him and when he is here, he should drive our loot.

¹ obang “to take”

² mengamángēt to make long.

³ another name for Sagagiegáng.

⁴ a Tpalapálag took a stilt of the pngáol-mangrove and an arrow from the same kind of wood.

⁵ oltóbēd to bring outside WALL.

⁶ from gongolúngēl carrying stick.

⁷ osik to look for.

⁸ from omeliáng to lay, to bring

⁹ obang “to take” .

¹⁰ mengamángēt to make long.

¹¹ from mesúbed to send news.

¹² tiubukl the one who chases the pigeons from hill to hill, tamát standing erect.

¹³ the galid spirit who makes people running to and fro, without them finding a place; ngu to bring.

¹⁴ kedsavanna

¹⁵ from obang to take, see above.

¹⁶ he is here.

¹⁷ orik to drive.

From the mountain Rénged Kerengókl moved to the south, together with both her brothers, the pigeon hunters. When they arrived in the woods of Blissang near Ngivál, Tagaduiâu shot a pigeon, which, pierced by the arrow, fell into the taro swamp in the taro-valley gomoklógēl. Kerengókl stepped inside and fetched it.

The high-ranking woman Dilagărár ¹ from Blissang saw this, called the girl, and started a conversation with her. She asked her where she came from, and Kerengókl said she was wandering around. With time the old woman took to the girl and invited her to stay with her, to plant the taro patch and to take care of it. When her brothers encouraged her, she agreed and stayed with the old woman taking care of her.

One day, when Kerengókl gathered mieg-almonds and kěam-nuts, chief Gomulkěam ² saw her. As the owner of the trees he had placed a tabú on them. Watching the girl high in the branches collecting the fruits made him angry. Thus, he took a stick and climbed after her in order to discipline her. She, however saw it in time, and when he was close to her, she said the magic of Gomsaubúkl, so that the branches of the neighboring tree bent over to meet her and she could step over. He stepped down again and tried to catch the female thief on the next tree, yet had same disappointment. He realized that she was in the possession of some magic that allowed her to flee from him. Therefore, he called to her to stop and said that he, too, was in the possession of the ulogóug magic and was suggesting an exchange. Now, Típetip a kmiěg, the almond collector, climbed down to meet him. He revealed his magic to her, it consisted of artfully roasting the kernel of a coconut (on one side) over a fire while saying magic words.

In this way the favorite food of the spirits, fish, etc. could be obtained. Kerengókl agreed to the exchange and had him show her the performance of the magic. Gomulkěam roasted the kernel of a coconut and then threw it into the sea and soon schools of fish came to feed on the tasty bait. She also tried it with the same success. Afterwards, she showed Gomulkěam the magic of Gomsaubúkl, yet, when teaching him the chant, she omitted some words (verse 8 a. 9). When Gomulkěam sat high in a tree and said the magic words for the first time, Kerengókl filled in the missing words, so that Gomulkěam happily reached the next tree. The second time, though, she did not do this and the man fell down and was dead.

Now in the possession of two forms of magic, Kerengókl returned to Blissang, where the first woman, a Ilengeĩ drew her to herself. When she passed the house of the old woman, this one asked her, “Where do you go my daughter?” Kerengókl replied: “I am poor, I am collecting mieg-tropical almonds to feed myself!” a Ilengeĩ invited her to stay with her, because she was old and frail. The girl agreed to this.

Kerengókl lived in a Ilengeĩ’s house. A women’s club in Blissang, wanted to organize an excursion, a blolóbol, to Ngarameskáng. The Women came to their oldest member, a Ilengeĩ, to ask her to participate. However, because of her old age, she did not want to do so, but finally she agreed. When the day of the departure arrived, she sent her adopted daughter Kerengókl in her place.

¹ according to some other information the woman nr. 1 Diraurák; further below a Ilengeĩ, obviously a repetition of the same event and the same woman.

² according to one information he came from Ngarebókú, according to another he had his blai Ngara ketĩt in Ngariélěp on Goréor, where the magic ulogóug was located. Therefore, people say the channel of Ngariélěp is so deep, because the nut has been inserted there. It seems he had the nut of the 7. Galid spirit at Milad (story 19).

When the women and girls arrived in Ngarameskáng, they found the settlement empty. Because of the Melekéiok-people, everyone had fled on top of the mountain Roispelĩ nearby a Imeungs ¹. Therefore, they went there and entered the community bai. Kerengókl had to suffer a lot of ridicule, since her skin was flayed because of hiking through the bush, and she looked rather ugly. Constant remarks were made about her own poverty and the one of her high-ranking mother, that she had no father and no fish. She, however, bore everything quietly.

When all women had assembled in the house with the chiefs, a monster in the form of a bersóiög-snake (see d.-pl. 4c) suddenly wallowed through the door. Aghast the women and girls fled, only Kerengókl remained seated ². As the animal started to occupy the place around her, she pushed her gotúngōl-bag underneath it, prepared a betelnut chew for it, and took care for its comfort.

Although Kerengókl was so ugly, the beast nevertheless choose her among all the women and left the other ones for the rest of the chiefs. When 10 days had passed the distribution of money among the woman of Blissang was supposed to begin. The snake crawled on a títimēl-tree that stood in front of the house. On top it shed its skin (see d.-pl. 4d) and a beautiful man climbed down ³. He took his stick-like lime container and his basket and went into the meetinghouse, where all men and woman had gathered. At once he took his place next to Kerengókl, who looked at him surprised and asked who he was.

The chiefs whispered to her he was their first rubak, Góbak ra ibedagál. Now the women tried to make Kerengókl look bad. Yet, the high chief was not to be misled, he stayed with her and slept with her in the following night. When two more nights passed the chiefs sent a message to Blissang that the payment was about to begin.

Before the women were leaving, Góbak ra ibedagál asked Kerengókl to bring a Dracaena (orredakl) leaf, over which he cast a spell. Then he rubbed her with it and suddenly it made her glow in great beauty. When she left, he insisted to accompany her on her way. Always both of them constantly remained behind the others, whereupon Kerengókl said the magic words of Gomsaubúkl, so that to the great surprise of the hikers they were already sitting at the next resting place ⁴ when the others arrived.

So they reached Blissang, where the chiefs from Ngarameskáng were invited to stop for a bite and a drink in both bai. Shredded taro was brought and Kerengókl, with the help of her Ulogóug-nut provided fish, which pleased her adoptive mother very much. Now Gobak ordered the chiefs of both village-halves (bítal blái) to gather the money. They paid 9 kluk and 1 bágēl to the girls, who delivered the money to the rúbak of Blissang.

Gobak, however, ordered Kerengókl to tell her mother he would come personally to visit her, in order to pay the goréděm-gratuity to the family; all her keblĩl should come. When all the relatives came, he gave Kerengókl one gaelbúgěp for her mother and 10 smaller pieces of money for the others.

¹ see story 104 about the downfall of Ngaremeskáng.

² the story is also told that Kerengókl did not see the snake and, once she was surrounded by it, she could no longer flee, but soon accepted the situation. Probably this is not the correct legend.

³ According to another account, he ordered a gabil partition, made from mats, to be erected in the bai, behind it he had his transformation and courted Kerengókl. The other woman watched through the holes of the matting. Kerengókl did not want to believe the beautiful man until he showed her his snakeskin.

⁴ the first resting place is called Gelabaraikiu.

After rubak I rubak Góbak ra ilámēs went to the family of his mongol and delivered his gorédēm, then the other 8 chiefs did the same. Afterwards, they agreed to return to Ngarameskáng, respectively to Roispelú, on the following day. Góbak ra ibedagál told a Ilengeî he wanted to take her daughter along as his wife and when the old woman was sad, he placed a bágēl as bus-morning gift around her neck, and Kerengókl got one, too. Using the Gosuambukl magic the couple then returned to Ngarameskáng. They Ulogógug-magic was not forgotten either. Soon afterwards Gobal prepared a big múr-feast for his wife in Blissang and, later on, an even bigger gongéd-feast for the chiefs of Ngarameskáng. Kerengókl had to help again with her Ulogógug-nut to meet the demand of fish.

The next rubak Góbak ra ilámēs also asked her to help, when he needed fish for his famous feast, therefore he came to Góbak ra ibedagál. Kerengókl gave her consent. Góbak ra ibedagál went with his wife to Ngêrutegeî, the western beach south of a Imeúings, there he placed the nut in the channel and they received a big catch of put in their nets. When they stopped fishing and Góbak ra ilámēs had carried the fish inland, Kerenegókl asked her husband about the ulogógug-nut. He replied that while bringing in the fish he had put the nut on the wharf, where he had forgotten it. When he returned there at once he could no longer find it. In the meantime a heavy rain had fallen and the water had actually flushed the nut into the channel. Because of the onset of low tide it drifted down the channel and out at sea.

It drifted to a Ulóng, where Gosilék was chief nr. 1. He had just thrown his fishing net (see d.-pl. 4^e). The nut ended in the net and it filled with fish. Without knowing about the magic device, Gosilék sold the net with the catch and the nut to a Ibêdul from Goréor. He found it and kept it in the family. Later on it turned into stone and in 1910 it was still was laying around in the village Goréor next to blai a Irágěl.

17b. The Feast of Gobak railámēs (told by Nirasumáng).

Took a peculiar course. On the savanna next to Ngaremeskáng he had cut a big tree for the construction of a canoe and had worked on the trunk. When it was finished so far that it could be pulled down ¹, he went home and prepared a feast, so that the inhabitants of the village would help him pulling it down. He saw to it that there was fish ², while his wife made sure that there was taro. When everything was ready, he announced, “Tomorrow, I will fetch my tree trunk”. Yet on the following morning, the people of the settlement left and nobody came to help him, although a lot of wonderful food was ready. Gobak contemplated what to do with all the food. Then at sunset, he heard the same sort of singing, as is sung when a big canoe is rowed in time. People in the village became anxious and shouted, “What is happening? What kind of noise is this?” Nobody could sleep that night. At night, numerous galid spirit had come down from heaven; they pulled the tree trunk down, then they celebrated a feast, and finished all the dishes.

Afterwards, Gobak finished the canoe and sold it to Gobak ra tkedēsâu, rubak I from Ngardúbög in Ngatpang for one galebúgēp-piece of money.

17c. The story of Gosilék, Máriar and Góreng.

After having sold the magic nut Ulogógug without knowing it, Gosilék, rubak I of a Ulong threw his fishing net into Toi ra Klemăáo! ³ to catch mokorókěr-fish, which he wanted to sell to the places on the rock islands

¹ Compare with story 96 “The Tree Trunk of Rekesiváng”.

² See story 17a of Tipetip a knieg and her Ulogógug-nut; this seems to be the reason that his fellow citizens turned away from him. According to one interpretation, he supposedly had a fight with rubak I, who barred people from attending the feast. This is not very plausible.

³ the word means assembly of stones, for instance a pier. According to KUB. I p. 36 it is the street in-between *a*Ulong and Ngobasángěl, which I indicated on map 2 as Kloul toi; KUB. V p. 5 only writes about Gosilék that he had been old and ugly, yet an expert fisherman.

In those days people from Goikúl and Madál still lived on the islands of a Mototói of which a Ilmalk is a part. The girl Góreng came from Ngaramiég and just spent some time in Goikul, when Gosilék came there and saw her. Immediately his passion for her was aroused, he went to her mother, and offered her money and fish as a payment for Góreng. Although she did not want to, she still had to marry Gosilék. She actually loved Ngiramáriar, with whom she lived in a secret marriage. When Gosilék brought Górieng to a Ulong, she started to get homesick and every few days she sailed to her lover, while Gosilék believed that she visited her mother. Soon afterwards Ngiramáriar got sick. Góreng did not take it seriously, but suddenly the message arrived that her mother was very sick. Anxiously she went there, but heard already en route that Ngiramáriar had passed away ¹. She asked to be dropped in Kisaúel and went over land. She sent the canoe back to Gosilék with the message of Ngiramáriarm’s death; he believed that the dead one was her brother. On the way over land, she decorated herself with flowers and made teláu-earrings for herself and for her lover.

When he heard the news, Gosilék said, “if I had known, I would have bought a pitcher full of syrup for the family”. In the end, he still did so and sent his messenger a Imeáo with a pitcher into the house of the dead. Goreng came down the mountain in full decoration and sat until afternoon next to the dead body in the middle door of the house, while the funeral feast took place. When people wanted to sew the dead body up, she placed herself on top of him and told them to cover her with a mat. Then she pressed her nose on his face and died in this position. The messengers of Gosilék, a Imeáo and Gokederáol saw everything. They left, when they saw that their “mother” was dead, in order to bring the message to their chief. He was just sitting on the rock Pkur segül and prepared a betelnut chew, while he supervised the fishing trip. He asked, “Now, are you coming?” “Yes” they said, “our mother, however, is dead!” He was so shocked that he fell down the steep cliff and was dead.

Chant of Góreng and Máriar.

Goreng:

1	Mariár ma ngák a diák kbágeíl	Mariar and I, I do not want to marry
	Gosilékl mo meketéket	Gosilék for a long time;
	ě ngi a dalák a ngipěsá găldil	only because my mother is greedy for his catch of fish
	l lemě lolát rengí rengák	he came and she promised me to him.
5	l kmu m kengě mě kbagím	He said, consent and I am your husband
	ě kungaũd mě mongá	and surround you and you eat
	de l'łúk l ngikil ra mageséngěl	my roasted fish from the depth
8	ra Pidŭl lulengēsál	of Pidŭl, rare and delicious things.

Góreng to the messenger to Mariár, with the request to tell him that she put a scraped and bound coconut adrift, so that he could oil himself in Ngarukeuíd:

9	Gobó meng bedŭl a Máriar	Go, Máriar has his stone
10	a Ngaraiķērukevíd	in Ngarukeuíd,
11	l mor a Ulěu a Máriar	then to Ulěu of Mariar
12	le mě lodĩngěl a rodél	go and visit his stick,
13	ar ‘rad a pngél	where he cuts lianas for his fish trap,
14	ě ngi aikěl bedŭl ra ngikěl	because there is his stone for the fish.

¹ In KUB. V p. 4: Kodráol brought the message of Mariar’s death to a Ulong where “Koreng” was just about to climb from the rock, in order to take a bath in the Klay-spring. At once she decorated herself with flowers and sailed with Kodráol to Goikúl. This is depicted in the lamentation of Góreng, which can be found in KUB., actually in the first 4 lines; the following 5 are the 8 of the chant I had recorded.

line 1	k in front of bageĩl = ak I, instead one can also hear bokbegil . KUB. VI p. 4: Ngak diak a pahil Kosilek e mo magedeket er ngij I adalák a ngij pisáng, a kaldil mlej lolatr ngij er ngak el tmo:mei mo pahík e hongáut ma mongá a delúul ngigiel, er a bidúul makesengl lulangasál.
“ 3	gadil , poss. dalák ; galéd poss. galdil ; nguipes to look with greedy eyes.
“ 4	mē = mēĩ here; lolat from melát to promise.
“ 5	WALL. kongei to consent, another information: priou me bagik .
“ 6	mangāud to form a circle with a net, in the same way he surrounds her with the best care.
“ 7	del’luk from melul to roast.
“ 8	P. a place on a Ulong; in Ngarumekáol, where people catch the big mámēl -wrasse.
“ 9	bad poss. bedúl . This indicates a rock, under which turtles sleep. The fishermen position light sticks ráod poss. rodél (line 12) in front of the hollow that float to the surface when they are touched.
“ 10, 11	Ngarukeuid, the “70 islands” south of a Ulong; a Ulěu a piece of coastline there.
“ 12	lodingēl from oldingēl to visit; rodel see line 9.
“ 13	mer’rád to cut lianas for fish traps pup poss. pngél .

In former times I received the middle part of Góbakraibedagál’s story in a little changed form, though with a new ending about 17d. “The Frog King”

It goes like this:

One day, following the order of the village chiefs, the women of Blissang made an excursion to Ngarameskáng, in the interior of Babldáob. Típētipakmiēg went along. However, she only belonged to a low class within this women’s club. When the woman had arrived, the chiefs of Ngarameskáng wanted to know, why the club had come. When they had learned the reason, they sent a message to the high chief Góbak raibedagál, who agreed to it. He let them know that all chiefs should assemble in the bai of the Blissang-women, so that everyone should receive his share; yet, the most noble of the women should wait for him at the entrance. The next morning, when the first of the women sat waiting at the main entrance of the bai, a huge, snake-like monster with a human head appeared. She was so shocked, that she at once ran out of the Bai through the opposite door.

Then Típētip took her place, placing her small handbag on the threshold, so that the monster could lay its head on it. Gradually the remaining mass writhed into the house and curled up on the door. It was high chief Góbak raibedagál. He said: Típētipakmiēg should be my share. You can distribute the others among yourselves. He remained with her until evening then he returned to his house, and did not come back to the bai as long as the Blissang-women resided there, because he knew that they were afraid of him. Only when it was time to leave, he told the chiefs to assemble there, in order to ask them in the bai if they had the money ready to pay their girlfriends.

Then, on the day of departure, he went himself once again there. On that day (after the payment had been delivered) he took Típētip with him to his house, while the others prepared their trip home. He ordered hot water to be prepared for Típētip, in it she was to bathe, while Góbak himself climbed an areca palm tree, supposedly to fetch nuts to chew on the way. In reality, though, he hung his snakeskin on top of it and descended as a beautiful man.

With the help of the hot magic water Típētip had washed away all her ugliness, thus they were a shining beautiful couple, causing astonishment and admiration. Góbak told the chiefs and women to go ahead. After some time had elapsed Típētip made the “magic of getting together” and suddenly they were both at the next stoping place, shortly before the group of travelers arrived. Everybody was surprised that Góbak and Típētip were already here, although they had stayed behind. The women, however, did not dare to ask how this could be. And it happened again and again until they arrived in Bliassang. There the inhabitants entertained the chiefs of Ngarameskáng 3 days long. They then paid their partners and started the trip back home. Góbak was the only one who took Típētip with him as his wife and the couple lived in the house Bedagál, the title holding house of the family.

Típētip got pregnant and gave birth to a daughter Titúięg, whom she fed herself until she was 12 years old. One day, the mother took her, as usual, to the taro patch. While Típētip worked a frog came to the daughter jumping back and forth in front of her, each time spattering his water on her ¹. She, however, did not notice him. Only when this event happened every day, she told her mother, who did not pay any attention to the words of her daughter. This continued until the girl was around 15 years old. Then one day, the frog told her to wait for it in the evening, as it had to ask her a question. Over this long period of time the girl had gotten used to the frog, and as she had grown fond of it she gladly agreed. At night she prepared her bedding next to the door. The frog really came, pulled off his skin, and suddenly a beautiful young man stood in front of the girl. He slept with her until morning then he slipped back into his frog skin and jumped away unnoticed. He had ordered the girl to ask her mother for her permission to marry. This she did and the mother agreed.

In the afternoon, when both of them met again in the taro patch the girl informed him and on the same evening the marriage of Típētip and Góbak took place. Soon afterwards, the frog went to Ngeráod, the holy place, and told his galid spirit-mother. This one was very glad and gave him a valuable piece of money, in order to place it around the neck of his wife. Góbak ordered a lot of food to be prepare and they brought it to the old mother in Ngeráod, who sewed some bags, filled them with money, and also gave them to the young couple for their trip to Ngarameskáng. In addition she placed the valuable piece of money, called Ugul a kerděu, on the neck of the young woman. Góbak was pleased about the great amount of money and distributed it among the chiefs of Ngarameskáng.

Story 18. The Aviator Klúbud singál.

log.: bai 2 VIII, bai 19 II^a, bai 38 V^a d.-pl. 5^b, bai 49 N., bai 64 I. pl. V^a, bai 73 W., bai 133 IV^b d.-pl. 5^c, bai 142 S. pl. XIII^b.

An old woman called Magád lived in Ngaraberúög ². One day, when she was working in her taro patch, cutting the stalks from the roots and washing these, she suddenly saw a child lying in the water. She abandoned everything, took the child, and carried it home, where she cared for it in every possible manner. The boy prospered quickly. When he had grown so much that he could walk alone to the channel and could come back he already started to become adventurous. Once he saw people leaving on rafts in order to go fishing. Quickly, he grabbed a taro stick ³, attached it to a bamboo pole, and jumped on one of the rafts, in order to come along. Out at sea people walked on the reef. He, however, remained on the raft and, when a school of kēmědúkl ⁴-bumphead parrot fish came, he speared the smallest one and brought it on board of the raft. People on the reef caught only small sea animals.

¹ just like buck rabbits do.

² a village in a Imelík on Babldáob, between Gámliangēl and Ngapedég, today there are only few residential houses in this location.

³ called símēs, a pointed stick made of hard wood, used to probe boiled taro roots if they are cooked

⁴ Bumbhead parrotfish, Scaridae/Scarinae, greenish-blue, which are usually caught in a similar manner, like the mesekūk surgeon fish (Acanthurus).

During the return trip they craved for the boy’s fish, he however did not want to part from it. He took it home to his foster mother, who was pleased with her son, who had the name Klúbud singál. People, however, were rather angry about his ungratefulness, and they no longer took him with them. It did not take very long and the boy was strong enough to pole a raft by himself. The first time, he took three taro-sticks with him. When a school of kēmēdúkl–bumphead parrot fish came, he dove down with his three spears and killed 3 fish, which he brought up to his raft.

The others, who had gone fishing at the same time, too, watched in utter amazement. Back home on the pier, he gave one of the three fish to Reblūd’s son, the high chief of Galēgúi, after he had cut it into pieces he gave the second one to the other boys who were in his company, the third one he brought his foster mother. The following day he visited Klúbud Singál, the son of Reblūd, in Galēgúi, because he wanted to become his friend. He was well received, even the high chief liked the clever young man and he wanted to use him to his own advantage. Therefore, he pulled the boy towards him, in order to marry him as soon as possible to his daughter and, thus, connect him with his family.

It did not take long and Klúbud Singál was Reblūd’s son in law, although he was still relatively young. One day, he went again fishing with 10 taro sticks and he also brought up 10 fish. All his friends came along with their rafts. They were delighted with the bold fisherman. All of them wanted to go fishing only with him and regarded the collection of seafood on the reef as a rather poor affair. On that day the 10 fish were brought to Reblūd’s house in Ngaramedengír, who sent two of them to the foster mother of his son in law. The rest was distributed among the houses in Galēgúi. Soon afterwards, Klúbud singál asked his father in law to order the young people of the village to bring lianas and baste so that he could construct a fishing basket. People followed his directions and he took all the material with him to the fishing site, accompanied by his wife and his friend. He caught many fish, which he sent home with his brother in law. He, however, took the bamboo and the baste and plunged with it into the deep water in order to build there a fishing basket. Both of them returned home one hour before sunset.

The next day they did the same, this time at Cape Pkurengél. On the subsequent day they went even further north to Ngaramedú, the channel of Ngaramlungúi. He always built his basket in the depth, while his wife waited on board of the raft. The following day they went even further north to a Ivokáko, the big passage in the reef, opposite of Ngradmau. There, the woman was also waiting on the raft, just when some fishermen came from the island Ngarekeklaú¹.

By the order of a Ugélkeklaú² they were looking for fish in preparation of a feast. They took the woman into their canoe and went home to their island. As a sign of a good catch they attached the sheath of an areca palm that was at hand, on top of a bamboo pole and hoisted this flag as a sign of victory³. Ugélkeklaú’s wife noticed this from her house that stood high on an elevation of the island. She told Ugél about it. He went down to the beach to see what kind of catch the fishermen brought with them. How surprised was he, when he saw a beautiful woman sitting on the outrigger. He liked her so much, that soon he took her with him to his abode high on the mountain of Ngarekeklaú. Arriving up there, he shouted to his wife, “Pack you belongings and move into the other house, this woman here is the prize of a feast⁴ and has to stay with me.” The following day, when the fishermen came once again to the reef passage Ivokáko, the raft where the beautiful woman had sat was no longer there.

¹ In the vicinity of the northern headland of Babldáob, can be seen from Ivokako.

² see story 8 and story 30a about Ngirateŋ.

³ called galeótl.

⁴ galderír a rúngéd “their catch of the fishermen” (for a feast).

When he found the raft empty, Klúbud singál went home to his mother in Garberúgto lamenting his loss. She was very much concerned about the loss of the woman, because of high chief Reblūd and in her fear she bound a piece of baste around her body, in the fashion Palauan women use to wear it. Yet, her stout hearted-son went to the big chief and told him everything he knew. Now, the old man became very angry and chased him away. As he believed in a misfortune he prepared everything necessary for the funeral feast of his daughter.

Klúbud singál returned to his mother and together they lamented their misfortune¹. Then his mother gave him the following advice, “Cut a bit from the *gadēpsunúngēl*²-tree and have a look if blood is oozing out. If this is the case, then cut it down and carve a bird from the wood of the tree trunk”. Klúbud singál searched in vain for such a tree and when he reported this to his mother, she said, “Remain calm! Tomorrow morning you go behind the house, there lies an old gadēpsunúngēl-trunk, where I usually defecate. Cut this one”. The boy did as he was told and when the cut caused some blood to flow he carved a kēdām, frigate bird. He reported to his mother and she taught him what he had to do: to cover the carving with big taro leaves, to place it in this fashion into a basket, and to bring it to the grassland Ngarabúsög, behind the house. There he was supposed to wait with the basket and when a bird came he was supposed to shout:

ak ruáol ra búsög! “I pick up a feather!”

This he did, and all birds passing by let some feathers drop, with which he filled his basket and then carried it home. Following his mother’s instructions, he attached the feathers on the wooden bird and made a hollow space inside, which he entered. At once, the old woman took a coconut frond and, while uttering some magic words, she hit the ground with it. This caused the wooden bird, with the burden in its body, to rise and then to slowly return. As this trial had been successful, Klúbud singál was ordered to catch some fish, which his mother smoked. Then she boiled some taro. When all the provisions for the trip were ready, she said, “Take your provisions with you into the bird and also some mats; then fly away and search for your wife”. She suspected that her son’s wife had been abducted. Once again she hit the ground with a coconut frond, the bird rose into the air, and flew over Palau. After searching for a long time, Klubud finally found his wife and Ugélkeklaú on the mountain of Ngarekeklaú. They were just about to delouse each other. He directed his flight down into the vicinity of the couple in order to make sure that she was really his wife. And she really was. In the meantime, all the people gathered to see the strange bird, therefore he rose quickly out of reach of their stones. Yet, he still heard a man saying to a Ugélkeklaú, that the fishermen wanted to catch a lot of fish and his reply, “Good, then we can break the coconut tomorrow!”³ When the fishermen were on the reef, the bird sat down on the outrigger of the canoe of Tegógo of Gólei, the oldest member of the community of fishermen⁴.

This one offered him a fish, holding it in front of him. Klubúd singál pulled it into the bird with his hand, so that they did not realize that this was an artificial one. They caught a lot of fish, and when they returned home Tegógo ordered the others to pull his canoe. With the help of his men, he fastened the bird to the canoe, and raised a victory sign, in the same manner as when they had brought the woman. a Ugélkeklaú saw this and called to his wife, ”there is a big lump on one canoe; what might this be!” When the fishermen had landed on the beach, they sent him a message that they had caught a lot of fish but had thrown away the rest because of a big and heavy bird, which they had fastened to the canoe.

¹ see the Moltórotk a adalál and the Okák-birds in KUB. VIII p. 304, (see bai 49) from metórd to be angry WALL.; ngak a matórüd ”I am angry” was very common in our days.

² the crataeva with its big, sausage-like, stinking fruits; delásēg-figures (totemic signs), are carved from its wood. Obviously, his mother also taught him some magic to fend off sharks while fishing.

³ As a sign of the beginning of a feast

⁴ runged.

What should be done? a Ugél said, ”First bring all the fish and then the bird, which should best be bound to a breadfruit tree”. This happened and now the couple could look at it at leisure. When the fish were distributed the bird often chirped a bit, so that it received many fish and also some sweet dishes to the satisfaction of the person inside, yet Ugél, who did not realize the deception, was concerned. The following day the fishermen received their pay ¹. Everyone remained in the assembly until evening, and only after receiving their pay the guests went home.

The following day, the village and the compounds were cleaned. Only after a Ugélkeklau went swimming in the afternoon the woman was finally alone. Klúbud singál opened the door and waved at her. She recognized him immediately and when she was about to run to him he told her to first bring the basket with the rest of the money and some more sweets. She took everything and then joined him. He loosened the rope, with which the bird had been tied up. He closed the door and waited for the people’s return, which soon took place. When a Ugélkeklau could not find his wife, he though that she had gone out and remained quietly sitting in the house. Soon a group of young people arrived. They threw their bundles of firewood ² in front of the house.

The bird was alarmed by the noise and when it was repeated, it suddenly took off and flew high up in the sky. Surprised the people looked after it. Klúbud singál set his course in the direction to Galëgúi, to Ngara medëngír, the house of Reblüd. There, the funeral feast had not yet ended and people were still sitting everywhere. Klúbud singál opened the door and people came towards him shouting: This is Túrang ³, our darling! — Then they pulled the woman outside, found him there, too, and sent for his mother. Klúbud singál brought the basket with money and together they all moved into Reblüd’s house, where the funeral party sat crying. Pain quickly turned into joy, particularly when Klúbud singál distributed the money among them.

In the mean time the children of Galëgúi visited the bird and because the door was left open with the help of a stick positioned at the door; out of curiosity they stepped inside. Suddenly one of them pushed the stick out of place and the door fell shut. Due to the noise the bird took off into the air and disappeared towards the north. The bird landed where Ngardmau is situated today and it turned into firm ground where the children settled and in this manner they founded today’s Ngardmau. The settlements there, Ngësëbëi, Ngaragëdag, Ngartúkür, etc. turned to Galëgúi pleading to leave their children with them. In return people from Galëgúi received the right to take unfinished canoes whenever they wanted, a right that still persists today. Moreover, whenever a sickness or some other evil strikes the taro plantations in Ngardmau, people there construct a kädám l bëkl, a “kite for a pair”, as big as the gable of a bai ⁴. One club prepares its line. Then it is brought to the grassland where people let it fly 5 — 7 days, while the inhabitants feast and eat there in memory of the Klúbud singál’s bird.

Story 19. Milad, the Breadfruit Tree of Ngiptál, and the Great Flood.

log.: Breadfruit tree: bai 19 II^b, bai 22 VIII^b, bai 24 IV^b, bai 28 I d.-pl. 5^c, bai 35 VI^a, bai 50 I, bai 55 E. pl. IV^a, bai 58 d.-pl. 5^f, (Temdokl), bai 70 V^b(ketórd), bai 79 IV^a, bai 84 III^a, bai 100 VIII, bai 104 VIII, bai 107 VIII, bai 119 N. illustr. a. VIII aqua., bai 120 S. (ph. Vol. I, pl. 5) a. II^a, bai 121 VII^b, bai 127 IV^a illustr. 18 in Vol. 5, bai 132 I, bai 137 III^a, bai 151 H. Milad’s foundation: bai 8 III^b d.-pl. 5^f.

¹ called tiakl..

²see story 30b.

³*turang* is a term of endearment for the high class daughters of chiefs

⁴ the kite is made of bamboo and pandanus leaves (buk). According to the monsoons Ngërutoi and Ngatpúiëg alternate constructing them (see Ngardmau).

Sent by the ”highest god” a Ugél ‘lë galid, the seven Ketórd ¹, came one day from heaven Ngulitël, the mountain next to Keklau in Ngarárd, in order to look after the stone Temdókl ² that stood as a guard at the head of the trail of Ngulitël. When foreigners came, he always inhaled the air between his tightly closed lips in order to warn the inhabitants of heaven. However, Temdókl had disappeared. This is what had happened: the woman Dirapkau ³, who later took the name Milad, lived without any children on the reef-island Ngiptál, north of Melekéiok. One day, when she was fetching fertilizer for her taro patch, she found an egg in the thin leafed gartókëi-pandanus next to the settlement Ngaragëbúkl ⁴, south of Ngarsúl. When she held it in her hand and looked at it, it soon swelled remarkably, getting bigger and bigger. Then she realized that it was not meant to serve as food, but that it was a child of the sun, a sun-egg ngisél a gaiós. She carefully carried it to Ngiptál and in her house; she placed it in her basket. After three days a child hatched, a sun-child ngalekél a gaiós. She held it over the fire in order to make it grow fast. He quickly grew up and became the boy called Terkélel, then he became a young man who supposedly was married to Segelai, the daughter of the chief in Ngáruangël. He was the first one, who organized a terúgól-feast in her honor, which from then on became a tradition in Palau.

The boy had always wondered, why only taro was served in the house of his mother and asked her for the reason of this monotony. She replied that she was a poor woman, who had nobody to catch fish for her. The boy felt sorry for the old woman and, one day, he swam out at sea and there he dove down. He swam underneath the island, underneath the breadfruit tree that stood in front of the mother’s house. He perforated it, the trunk and a big branch, so that each surge threw fish into the hole, which went through the hollow tree and fell down from the branch in front of the house. Suddenly those, who so long had lacked fish, lived in abundance and could even give fish to their neighbors. Yet, this caused the envy of the others, and therefore one day, these gathered in order to cut down the Medúngiptál breadfruit tree with their axes and adzes.

However, as soon as they had put the axes on the tree, a great flood came and water poured out of the tree and out of the sea in such torrents covering the island so that all inhabitants of Ngiptál drowned ⁵. All except Milad, whom her grateful son had put on a raft ⁶, which drifted away and landed in Ngaragebúkl. Terkélel flew away, once he was convinced that everything had perished. He flew through heaven, where he saw a beautiful girl sitting in the house of a Ugél‘lëgalid. However, he did not stay, but let himself down in Ngaragebúkl, where he started to live with his mother.

The following chant of Terkélel refers to these events:

arúa sagaláia ⁷ !	You men!
kem lar a ged ⁸ l ra goimór?	You went fishing, where about?

¹ name for those galid, whose mouths are vertical and not horizontal, comes from the woman Latmikáik (story 1).

² from otimd to audibly breath in through the lips.

³ supposedly synonymous with Gobagád deruaŋ from Ngabúkëd (story 58).

⁴*log.* in Bai 109 I, driving the fish in the channel there.

⁵In KUB. II, p. 119, note it is written: “The land Ngipkal is situated in the east of Ngival. Only two families, Ngasabéy and Suisoboy, still remain from these arrivals. They brought with them the knowledge about goddess Mangidap al brut kóul and Korról. Even today they still dedicate one of their cults to them. In case of sickness in the family, they go to the place of the sunken land. There, they eat food and ‘submerge’ it in the sea”. Without any doubt, the woman of blai I Ngesegeŋ in Ngaremegaŋ is Ngasabey; no longer could I find Suisoboy; Mangidáp see story 12

⁶According to some other information it was a ngot-taro-pounding-board, like in story 169; but d.-pl. 5e indicates a bamboo raft.

⁷*sagái* man: poetic address.

⁸*ged* = gei fishing place or –trip.

me ke dí tilóběd ¹ ě kosekesí ² a uél	You only went out to catch a turtle
me ke lutáng ³	and you returned satisfied.
a lo mūr a mǎrau lagád	When the rich man organizes a feast,
ng sómir ⁴ Ngamedú ⁵	Ngamedú is superior to them,
mongo veiláol ⁶ a bai	the bai serves as a dancing stage
ma teluól ⁷ medú a ngára bai	and a small breadfruit tree is standing next to the bai
ra Gebúkl ⁸ ã ngél.	of Gebúkl and a Morinda.
ngōrakirú ⁹ a tolkgíu ¹⁰	round like the full moon are your tortoise shell bowls,
ar melúsōg l dil	you happy women,
ma tolungúies ¹¹ ra btiil a Tei ¹²	the fetch the money from the backside of Tei
l melekéték ¹³ rengí	and present it in them!

When a concubine, a móngol, should be obtained for the club, to the surprise of everybody, Terkélël suggested to look for her in heaven. Surprised everyone shouted, “How are we supposed to do this”? He, however, replied, “You can do it, if you just place your feet into my footsteps straightaway”. — At the designated hour the entire club left, Terkélël in the lead. After a steep climb in said manner they arrived very tired at the trail-head of the heavenly village street of Ngulítël ¹⁴. There, the stone man Temdókl was keeping vigil ¹⁵, informing a Ugél‘lëgalíd of all arrivals with a whizzing sound. Terkélël liked this stone-man so much that he decided to take him along on his return trip.

When the club had taken a break at Temdókl, they walked on the stone path to a Ugél’s house, that was situated in the celestial village Medidiül. They entered. A pretty girl sat in the house; which everyone liked at once. After he had told the god where they came from, Terkélël presented his request. At once he placed the money to buy the móngol in front of the king. This one, however, noticed surprised that the girl resembled the boy so very much that they both had to be brother and sister ¹⁶. Therefore, he refused his request. He told him: Why do you come to us, accompanied by people, to bring the sister into the bai? So the club had to leave empty-handed. In order to carry out his theft, Terkélël stole a bundle of wide būk-pandanus leaves behind Ugél’s house and wrapped the stone man with them, and they took him unnoticed to their place Nagregëbúkl. Soon afterwards a klegëdáol-visit came to Ngulítël.

¹ tilóběd perf. of tuóběd.

² kosekesí the catch according to the kesókēs-kind with nets and coconut fronds.

³ l mut to return, áng completion, úng in the very act of.

⁴ somikák superior to me, sómir . . . about them.

⁵ Ng. probably a blai in Ngáruangël.

⁶ goilaól the dancing stage, a construction like a bowling alley for a feast.

⁷ teluó a bit.

⁸ in Ngaragebúkl; ngél the morinda bush, on which a lizard jumped.

⁹ gorakirú full moon.

¹⁰ toluk the women’s turtle shell plate.

¹¹ olungúüēs = olongkónk to dismantle a heap of stones.

¹² Ngirateŋ, the galid spirit who brought the money to Palau, see story 30; compare with story 9 about the delarók-curlew

¹³ melekéték to present (the money) in them (the plates), like the taro on a bench; for the price of Terkélël.

¹⁴ it was the first part of heaven, Telngatk ra iángëd, which is mentioned in story 203 about Madlutk.

¹⁵ see log. bai 58 d.-pl. 5f a. Vol. 2, plate 10⁴.

¹⁶ His wife supposedly was called Mlageŋ, a name that is added for priestesses. According to some other information, Ugél had a celestial wife above and another one on earth in *aU*đëuíd. Out of jealousy, the one from above sent a rat down to destroy all fruits, but the one from below sent her cat, which devoured the rat (see bai 98 Gatailegáng in Medórom). On the gërabái a son of Ugél is called Gegomegimël. I could not find out if he is the same as Terkélel (see story 69b).

Unheralded they arrived in front of Ugél’s house. Immediately, he had somebody look after Temdókl and was told that he had been stolen. Enraged, a Ugél sent his seven galíd, the Gëuid l Ketórd, down to earth to look for Temdókl and to punish the misdeed. Before their departure, they took a coconut out of its shell, roasted it on the fire, and placed it back into one half of the shell. The roasted kernel of a coconut ulogóng is the favorite dish of the spirits ¹. The nut contained a magic which caused it to burst when it came into the vicinity of Temdókl, then the green lizard gamái degëdúu ² crawls out and shows the searchers the way.

They went down to earth with this nut. First they looked in Ngaregolóng, then they went down the western coast, because they thought maybe the stone-man could have been dropped into the ocean there. The nut, however, remained intact. They went on and reached a Irai, on the southern end, then they moved up the east coast. At Nggasagáng they met some people fishing and received some fish as presents. There, when reaching a Ulogóng, the coconut broke into two halves and the lizard jumped out. At the location, which is therefore called Ngara maragararákl they hung the nut, tied into its husk, on a tagarákl-hook. Then they followed the animal to the house of Milad in Ngaragëbúkl, on the northern side of the bay of Nggasagáng. She was just cooking her taro, therefore, they gave her the fish, which they had gotten in Nggasagáng ³, with the instruction to prepare some food for them, while they went to look for Temdókl. Milad agreed. She always took one boiled taro-head, split it in two halves and placed a fish in-between the hot pieces, so that the fish were cooked.

In the meantime the seven galíd followed the lizard to the chief’s bai in the middle of the village, besides which Temdókl stood. The lizard jumped on it and then crossed over to the morinda bush nearby. Yet, the galid spirit were not happy about their finding, because the eyes of the stone figure had been removed. Whoever had taken them was not known. People blamed Milad for the robbery. At any rate, even today there are still pieces of money on Palau, which are called madál a Temdókl. Each “eye” is a galebúgëp amounting to 40—100 Mk.

The galíd left the stone image where it was and returned to Milad. There they were surprised by the peculiar new dish. They were so grateful for the old woman’s cordial hospitality that they revealed that, as a punishment for the theft, a Ugél‘lëgalíd would send a deluge upon the earth shortly before the coming full moon. When they had left again, Milad told Terkélël to construct a big raft shortly before the full moon. He should also place the ngot-pounding board, as well as all the other household goods on it. The raft should have a long rope, too, as a big flood would soon come, because of the theft. Terkélël did as he was told, but the rope he had tied to a tree proved to be too short. When the flood came at the assigned time, the raft capsized and Milad would have drowned if she had not had the taro pounding board. Now she sat on this one, yet could not escape her fate, because, when the board drifted to Ngaramlungúi, to the mountain Ngáruak that still was above the water, her hair became entangled in the branch of a tree and she perished by drowning.

Temdókl quickly hurried to heaven to report this accident to the seven galíd. They followed him down to earth, found the corpse, and, after disentangling her hair, placed her on a bed of leaves on top of the mountain. Then they returned to heaven to ask a Ugél‘lëgalíd for new vital powers. He gave them some life-giving water, which they carried down in a taro leaf. However, when passing a garamál-hibiscus bush, a branch stuck into the taro leaf so that the water drained onto the bush. Therefore, this tree is immortal, each piece of it, when stuck into the ground, continues to grow.

Once more they returned to a Ugél to ask for another remedy. At first, he was annoyed about their negligence, but then he gave them a stone. When placed into a body it should give eternal life.

¹ see further details about the nut at Típetip, story 17.

² tudáol on the gërabái, where also a frog (Vol. 5 illustr. 5^c).

³ see bai 109 I pl. IX^b.

They left again and went down with it. The jealous galid Mad a galid, who did not want people to have eternal life, saw how the stone changed hands in the house. He sent the sea bird gārēs l bādāog (Black noddy) ¹ to meet the wanderers, who soon threw stones at it. Thus, they also lost this instrument. When they now returned a third time to a Ugél, he furiously threw them out. Therefore, they went once more down to earth, debating what they should do to bring Milad back to life. While they were sitting together discussing this issue, a delép-soul flew by. It came from Ngërutegei, a part of the village of a Imeúngs. They asked it where it came from and the soul answered, ”from cutting palm wine”. Then they asked it to condescend to enter the corpse, in order to restore the woman to life. Yet, the soul refused to do so. It only agreed, when they implored it to be only be present in the body in the mornings and in the evenings. This is the reason that people feel so tired at night and at lunchtime, because then the soul delép leaves the body and roams about; or this is the reason why people dream. So, Milad returned to life and gave birth to 5 children, who founded the main places of Palau, a Imeúngs, Ngarekeai, Goréör, Melekéiok, and Ngabiúl ².

One comes to know more about these sons by looking at the legendary stones, as for instance the son Duréor (Goréör), who was born on the mountain Ngáruak and who was supposedly very naughty. Therefore, the mother threw the boy away on top of her mat, which she used for the protection against the sun (rengerengél a Milad). Together with its load, it fell down in Goréör, where they were stored next to Blai a Irágél in the form of stones. The son Golekéiok was also naughty and was, therefore, thrown to Melekéiok, where he is still today in form of a stone. Milad let her placenta drift on a coconut shell; it drifted into the channel of Ngabiúl, where the afterbirth turned into a stone and is still lying there. The boy a Imeúngs was well behaved, therefore, he was allowed to stay with his mother. But the stone came to Ngel’lau (see there). The flood brought a shark (gadéng) and a stingray (rul) to the hill Bad a gadéng, where they remained.

Around 1870, the stone man-Temdókl came first from Ngaragebúkl to Goréör, because of a big káep-canoe race, from there it was handed over to Pelíliou, from where it came to a Irai. In 1910 it still was acclaimed there. Now it is in the Linden-Museum in Stuttgart.

¹ Anous tenuirostris Tem., the thin peaked noddy In KUB. I p. 46—47 a reminiscence of this story can be found: ”Among the fabulous kalits of the Palauans one is outstanding. He wanted to make these happy and who was called Obagat (Gobagád KR. compare story 58). He was the protective spirit of the land and was omnipresent. The legend tells us that Obagat wanted to give people eternal life; for this purpose he wanted to plant a stone into the breast of human beings. Then they would be as strong as a stone, courageous, and they would never need to eat. However, the treacherous Tariit (Rallus pectoralis) did not want this. He gave the advice to breath only breath into the human body. This gave people life, but they fellvictim to sicknesses and death. Yet, the good Obagat did not want to listen and started with his work. Only water was still missing to secure immortality. The son of the kalit went to fetch it and brought it in a taro leaf. The evil Tariit moved a twig of the karamal tree standing at the path to tear the leaf and the water spilled over the tree. The tree remained immortal, even when the smallest piece of it is stuck into the ground it sprouts and grows into a big tree, people, though, are weak and die. Obagat was furious about the destruction of his wishes, in his pain he grabbed a piece of wood and hit Tariit on the head. Therefore, in Palau all rails have a red stripe on top of the head. It is the sign of the bloody wound caused by Obagat’s hand. Tariit’s viciousness is still proverbial today, because, when someone does begrudge someone else something, then people say, you are just like a rail”. — About the creation of the fire, mentioned afterwards, see story 17^a about Tiptip, log. of the 1. bai IIIa shows galid spirit Gobagád, taking a spark from the red patch on the head and blowing to become a fire. When he succeeded, he beat terid dead. (story 215).

² KUB. II p. 123 says, “Aymyungs, Molegoyók, Eymeliik, Korryór, and Ngabyul attribute their origin to Milathk, the woman who survived the elimination of the Palauans, which was ordered by the gods. Although she belonged to Ngarekobukl, she drifted with the flood to Aremlunguy. Here, she was revived and became the legendary mother of today’s generation”. By the way, the legend of Milath became known because of KUB. I p. 46, though in a very imperfect version. Here, it is said that the old woman Milath, who gave birth to the 4 countries, lived in Ngarekobukt, in Ejrraj. There, people slew Atndokt, one of the 7 Kalits. She fed his friends, who looked for him and told them about this atrocity. The friends flooded the land, but warned her beforehand. She build a raft, but the rope, which was prepared from lianas, was too short, therefore she drowned and her corpse drifted on top of the mountain where she turned into stone. — Terkélel and heaven are not discussed at all and Ngiptál, too. In KUB. II p. 119 it is only mentioned with few words and without Milad. The girl Ngarekeai was placed in the middle of all her brothers, to give them money and good advice. On Palau, even today, this is the duty of the sister. While stones, representing the brothers, are lying around at the mentioned places, all that remains of the sister is a golekáng pot, it supposedly lies next to the rubak-bai in Old-Ngarekeai.

Story 20. The Decline Of Ngáruangél ¹

And The Emigration Of Its Inhabitants To Pélau.

log.: bai 32 VI^a, bai 49 n. illustr., bai 86 VII^a, bai 103 VI^b d.-pl.6^a, bai 139 III^a pl. XI^b; kesókēs-fishing: bai 54 VII^a, bai 78 VI^a, bai 92 II^b, bai 125 V^b, bai 137 IV^b, bai 142 S. pl. XIII^b.

Nggeiangél once was under the power, this means it was kér of Ngáruangél, whereto they had to deliver their fish. One day, Rubak a Rdegór ² and a Rungúl debül ³, who lived on the south side of the island Nggeiangél went fishing with their people. They stored their entire catch in a few canoes and, while the old ones continued fishing, some boys remained in the canoes. Then a man from Ngáruangél sailed to them and inspected the mouths of the boys. When he found the mouth of a Rdegór’s son smelling of fish⁴, he took the boy on board and pushed the foot of the mast through his hand. Then he sailed with the howling boy to Nggeiangél. There he dropped the boy who soon died, because of the cruelty ⁵.

Both chiefs were disgusted by this brutality and pondered how they could destroy Ngáruangél. Rungúl sailed around Pelau in order to find a device. In Ngarebökö at Ngivál he found a mother-of-pearl shell, to peel and cut taro. It was called ngarek and belonged to rubak a Regósög ⁶, and it had magic power. When a Regósög heard about the humiliation and the violation to which Nggeiangél was subject for a long time, he gave Rungúl the shell and taught him the magic. Then Rungúl went to the island Ngaregúr, which then was still connected to Ngarekeklaū by a land bridge ⁷. He slept there and decided to test the magic here. The following morning, when he was moving the shell through the air in a cutting motion while saying the gólei, the rock Koitáp kēmédókl, today’s cape, suddenly separated from the land and a second attempt at the eastern end of the island caused the detachment of Ngarekeklaū. After this success, he returned to Nggeiangél and told a Rdegór everything that had happened.

At this time, a child, by the name Delangelí ruángél ⁸, grew up in Ngáruangél. He had such a big head that it could not sit. It was just lying and crying all the time. Nothing could satisfy the boy, no matter what was offered to him. He was only calmed, when people brought him a big gologútēl-bamboo raft. In the in the night of the following full moon, he started crying again and said to his mother, ”Put the raft into the water and take me with you on board of the raft”. When she had done his bidding, he still was not satisfied but asked that all the people should

¹ situated north west of Nggeiangél.

² see story 9, the end.

³ In KUB. I, p. 47 a. II p. 118 we read only about Arngúl dubüul (desperation) and his son; today this rubak-title does not exist any more, instead a Rdegór is now still rubak I.

⁴ KUB. does not mention the reason for this abuse.

⁵ KUB. I: “sailed back to their country and the child died during the trip”.

⁶ see story 84.

⁷ According to KUB. II, p. 118 he cut Ngorgúr off from Arekolong. The continuation of the story is recorded like this: “The desperate father was thinking of revenge, he set sail and finally reached the land Delngóbol, where people did not know the advantage of the sail, and thought this was an approaching rain. The land consisted of a steep and empty shoreline, and the land could be reached through an opening in the rock face. Arngúl dubüul was well received, yet he could not control the pain about the loss of his child. Therefore, he was so broken-hearted that his host asked him for the reason. After he had heard everything, he tried to reassure him and had him stay for a longer period of time, until Arngúl finally wanted to leave. At his departure, he received three items from the master of the land Delngóbol, which should help him to take revenge on Ngaruangel. He received a piece of yellow root to bring him back home. It was attached at the bow of the vehicle it would transport him wherever he wanted to go, the second item was a mother-of-pearl shell, with which he only had to touch a piece of land in order to spoil it, and the last one was a paddle, which he only had to move with or against the threshold in order to enrage or to calm the sea. Thus equipped he returned to Palau and took a stab at the tip of Arekolong, where he cut off the small island Ngórgúr. Now he went to Ngaruángl, causing its doom, from which only few families escaped to Palau. In KUB. I p. 47 it is said about Arnul, “He owned a rudder that made him rule over the others; he also owned Kossol, the root of the yellow root plant, which, when placed on the front end of the canoe, would lead it wherever the owner wanted it to go. In addition he also owned a Kokakuu, a piece of wood, which found all fish in their stone houses and he also possessed one half of a common mother-of-pearl shell that is here called Kassijuk”.

⁸ Dalongóbol is an extinct village at Ngardmaū. Here Rungúl received the magic of the paddle.

gather on the raft, where they remained until the next day. In the meantime both rubak of Nggeiangël had prepared for action. At full moon Rungül went to the northern Cape Madremél, carrying the ngárek-shell in his hand and throwing it into the water, then he pushed it further with his hand. At the same time he said the gólei. Soon a wave was created which grew bigger and bigger. With the help of the sea monster Golëu val’ág, a gigantic snake, like a moray eel, 7 big seas were all together created. They rolled towards Ngáruangël and destroyed the island. However, the raft, on which the boy Delangelí ruángël was, together with the people from Ngáruangël, drifted away and landed on Babldáob, where people spread and founded new families and communities ¹. A young woman landed at Matúl next to Gólei and then came to blai nr. I Metáui in Ngarabâu; as Dira goroség she became the founding mother of the Ngáruangël-people. Some people came to a Gol into blai Gongolákl, and from a Gol to Ngabúkêd into blai I Goisaváng; both houses, although extinct today, still belong to blai a Idíd in Goréör. Others came to a Imúngs into blai III Ngaru telegei and they founded the settlement Ngkebedül on the Kloultaog in the bay of Ngát pang. From there, several of them wandered to a Imelik and settled in Ngurúngël in *a*Imül (title II Regëkemúr), part of them went to Mekér near a Imĩg (title I Sépsis, II Sagarmidár.

Still others arrived at Ngatkíp, in blai I Ngërëmekíg and then in blai Telebádël in a Irai. When she had become old and sick, the woman Diragoroség, moved also from Ngarabâu to Ngatkíp. She made mangalil-signs and learned that the sickness came from the east, from a Irai and from the local galid spirit Medegei pélau.

Therefore, she sent the famous piece of money, móngongau Bulong on a stretcher towards the east, and people from the entire district Ngaragúmëlbai carried it, singing chants (gongúrës) and accompanied by the sound of the trumpet shells, to the part of the village called Bitalpelú in a Irai. There, the Ngira kikláng Mlad rarsáol, the priest of Medegei pélau, lived in the sop-cult house Ngëre ki kláng. He paced up and down when the piece of money was brought, then he predicted the future: you have to leave the house a Idíd!

— A daughter of Dira goroség was already married to rubak a Rduláol in a Iebúkül and she had a daughter. One day, when this one had blossomed into a beauty, the Ibëdul of Goréör (the one who is buried under the kesil-cedar bay cherry tree and who had a son called Sol) came into a Rduláol’s house and, after having taken a bath, he asked for a betel nut chew. The rubak had everything brought to him. After some time, when a Ibëdul had served himself and remained seated, a Rduláol ordered a torch to be brought, in order to light his way home. Yet, a Ibëdul did not leave. Then a Rduláol said: I am afraid, why do you remain seated for such a long time? What do you want? My boy should take you away! — Yet, a Ibëdul did not budge. Thus, a Rduláol asked anew: What do you want then? — Now a Ibëdul said: I want to marry your daughter! — At first the rubak was quiet, then he agreed, because he did not dare to say no. Afterwards all the members of the household dispersed, only a Ibëdul and the daughter stayed behind and consummated their marriage, despite Medegei pélau’s warning. On the following morning, when a Rduláol entered his house a Ibëdul gave him a big piece of money, a bágël as a bus-marriage present. Afterwards, the daughter went with her husband to Ngaraidid, where a lot of sweets were available. Whatever was left over, she sent to her old mother Dira goroség, who died soon afterwards.

Then a Ibëdul took the rest of her Ngatkíp family into his house, so that he was no longer obliged to send food there. Dilsépsis also moved from Mekér to Goréör in order to help her relatives and she married Meríngël a dingál, who was also an Ibëdul ².

¹ KUB. I, p. 33 a. II p. 119 mentions: Amid in Molegoyók (blai IV a Mid in Melekéiok), Ngarueos in Ngiwál (blai I Ngaruëos in Ngaragëlük), Ngidilingl in Radmau (blai VII Ngedilingel in Gurdmaü), Aybadahál in Róyos Pelu (blai I a Ibedagál in Roispelú), Aykaláu in Korryor (blai II a Ikelaü in Goréor); I heard that the house a Ibedagál in Galáp is meant and not the one of Roispelú; a Idíd and blai raluil in Ngardolólók are also mentioned.
² see Gor. at. 4 gen. II.

Now the descendants of these two women fought over the title a Ibëdul, they displaced or killed the members of the old a Idíd-family, and therefore, today’s a Ibedul originate from these two Ngaruángël-women.

The first of these descendants was a Ibëdul Ngiraidíd. Only one pair of brother and sister had survived, Mlad ra iláod and Bilung. Now these two tried to instigate the people of Goreor against these upstarts. However, Mlad ra iláod paid for it with his life and Bilung fled to Ngarbagéd, where rubak Ngiraibüg took her in. The following night he brought her in a canoe to Babldáob. She visited all places along the east coast, but it was only in Keklau that Bilung wanted to stay. Ngiraibüg told rubak I Kloulóbak what had happened, therefore, this one accommodated the woman and handed her over to blai Morisóng.

She had a son called Ngira góbakëtél because he lived in blai Gobakëtél ¹. Bilung died and was buried in Keklau. When news of this reached Goréör, a Ibëdul sent a canoe to Keklau in order to deliver a piece of money to Kloulóbak as binger. The canoe brought Ngira góbakëtél to Goréör and a Ibëdul gave him a house in Ngarióulidíd, where he, the last scion of the old a Idíd-family, died childless.

b) Stories Of The Individual States. Ngaregolóng. Story 21. The Moon-Child of Nggeiangël.

log.: bai 98 II^b.

A woman in Nggeiangël had no children and, therefore, at night by the light of the moon she went outside to request a child from it. The moon took pity on her, came down, cleaned the kim-shell on the stone rectangle in front of the house, and filled it with water, and he ordered the woman to drink it. This she did. Yet, in the water that she swallowed was also a larva and so she got pregnant. Soon afterwards, she gave birth to a child. The moon came down for the occasion and told the mother that her child would grow very rapidly. If any costs should be caused by the child, he would pitch in. The boy grew quickly and when he was an adult, he married the daughter of a Rdegór. Soon afterwards, the rubak organized a big feast. Everyone laughed at the young man, because he was not able to make a contribution. Then the mother remembered the words of the moon.

When the time had come to present the contribution, the man and his brother-in-law sailed to the edge of the sky, where they met the raising moon. He recognized his son and gave him a bag filled with money. Then he put a piece of money around the neck of his mother and of his wife and went to the feast, where he not only paid his contribution but also for the entire feast. The rest of the money he gave to a Rdegór. Therefore, this house in Nggeiangël is so rich.

Story 22a. Nggeiangël’s Devastation. log.: bai 127 III^a d.-pl. 6^b.

The fishermen of Ngeiangël were well known because of their skills, especially catching fish with the rül-line of coconut fronds. In former times they came to Gólei, in order to catch fish there. They caught so many fish, that Tegógo, the rub. I from there, made them pay 4 galebügëp and 10 kluk. In former times, the fishermen in Palau were not allowed to eat raw fish. When you met someone, whose mouth smelled of fish, he was killed.

It happened one day in Nggeiangël that the son of rubak Rungül debül ate raw fish. Thus, people put him on board of a kaberiüg-canoe, hoisted the mast, set the sails, and let it drift away (see story 20). Rungül debül was very sad about the loss of his son and thought about means to destroy the settlement.

¹ see bl. 33 in Goréör close to blai Ióulidid.

He sailed to today’s uninhabited Dalóngobol in Ngardmãu, where a knowledgeable man taught him some magic with which he could achieve all he wanted. Rungūl returned by canoe and when he reached the vicinity of Nggẽiangēl he said his gólei and stirred the ocean with the paddle, so that four high seas were created and flooded the island. Only two people survived on board of a raft that had been tied down.

Story 22b. Typhoon In Nggẽiangēl.

log.: bai 48 IV^a pl. III^c, bai 65 II^b d.-pl. 6^c.

A man from Nggẽiangēl came to Ngaregolóng dragging some wood in the ocean, which he then sold. When he noticed an approaching typhoon he shouted loudly that people should fasten and secure their houses, therefore people survived. Around 1860 there was a supposedly strong typhoon, yet without any floods. In Ngaráus all houses were toppled by the wind.

Story 23. The Owl From Nggẽiangēl. The Hydrocephalus.

log.: bai 24 I d.-pl. 6^d, bai 51 I a. IV^b, bai 72 VII^a plate VII^a, bai 80 V^b, bai 107 III^a, bai 129 VII^a.

One day, a man brought an owl to Nggẽiangēl, which had hitherto been unknown to people there. When it started hooting at night it caused general shock; people climbed on top of the houses or crawled underneath them. In short, they hid wherever they could. Once, there also was a hydrocephalus on the island. It is said, that when he was lying on the ground he announced approaching canoes earlier than anyone else. Otherwise he was very stupid.

Story 24a. The Galid spirit Malauvát (see story 128 a. 156).

log.: bai 53 VII^a.

On Ngariúngs, an island of Nggẽiangēl, was a galid called Malauvát, who quickly went wherever he saw smoke. When he found people there, he devoured them. The inhabitants of the island became so afraid that they fled to Ngaregolóng. Only a poor man and his mother remained. He built a big fire and put stones in it. When the galid saw the smoke, he came immediately, and opened his mouth wide, in order to devour both of them. Then man, however, grabbed tongs made of bamboo and threw the hot stones into the throat of the demon. At first, this one thought them to be good food and swallowed all of them. Yet shortly afterwards, he was burning inside and died. Now, the poor man built a house for his mother and when the refugees heard in Ngaregolóng that the monster had died they returned and declared their liberator to be their leader.

Story 24b. The Land Bigáket (see Vol. 2, p.1).

log.: bai 93 IV^b, bai 114 V^b d.-pl. 6^f a. pl. VII^b, bai 123 III^a, bai 134 V^a, bai 148 III^b.

It is divided into 2 sections, the woman are dancing on one side, in Gongotakátl, on the other side, in Ngěángēs, the men. However, due to the dangerous strait, they cannot get together.

Story 25. How A Constantly Crying Boy Was Satisfied.

(Ngalekél goiúl or Ngoidóid)

log.: bai 21 III^a, bai 22 VI^b d.-pl. 7^a, bai 142 VI^a.

A boy, called Ngoidóid, was born in Nggúi in Ngaregolóng, who was crying constantly. His mother was desperate and gave him to another woman, who also passed him on because of his non stop crying. Thus, he moved from hand to hand until he came into a house on the coral islands of Mógemog, east of Yap. There, a man tried really hard to find something that could satisfy the boy. Finally he tried it with an ilokugil-spider crab, which dragged on a line a vast number of fish. This calmed the boy and he stopped crying. Later on, Ngoidóid returned to Nggúi.

Story 26. The Floating Bai.

log.: bai 2 IV^b d.-pl. 6^f a. pl. XIV 17.

Once upon a time, people from Ngartmúiēl fished in the Garásāg-passage south of Nggẽiangēl. There, they saw a bai floating on the water. It was beautifully constructed, had gad-posts in the form of human beings, just like the rubak-bai are still constructed today in Goréör and Ngabiúl The fishermen went inside and lived three days in it like a real klegádaol. Each day the door- and corner posts started suddenly shaking and at once the floor of the Bai was filled with food. On the fourth day, the fishermen took the bai in tow and wanted to bring it home, but it broke into pieces at the shore. Others say it drifted away.

Story 27a. Túrang Of Ngaregúr a. The Money Tree.

log.: bai 3 IV^b, bai 103 II^a d.-pl. 7^d.

When Túrang re gúr died, her brother danced with his spirits on a dancing stage. Only afterwards, the soul of the deceased went to a Rok on Ngeãur. In Ngaregur stood also a pālaū-tree, called Pālaū rengeregúr. It bore pieces of money, just like the besepeséla Ngorót. On top grew kluk, the ”fruits of pālaū”, rdegél a pālaū. The ones that had dropped were bad and called udíl ”garbage”.

Story 27b. The Dam In-Between Ngaregúr And Ngarekeklaū.

bai 135 II^a.

Tutau of Ngaregúr worked hard, in order to build the dam in-between both places. Yet, Tagédēl continuously destroyed the work. When Tutau caught the culprit, he suggested to work together with him and this really caused the work to progress.

Story 28a. The Louse Of Ngatmél.

log.: bai 27 VIII d.-pl. 7^c.

Once upon a time, a big louse lived in Ngatmél, which caused a lot of harm in the village. When a feast was prepared for it with taro, fish and turtles, the louse sat on the taro bench. Then two men took a bamboo pole, each one of them holding one end, and they squashed the beast while shouting: m m !

Story 28b. The Blind Man From Ngatmél, Migovatmél.

log.: bai 9 VI^b pl. 7^b, bai 15 V^a, bai 130 VI (aqu.).

In the course of time, people from Ngatmél became very boisterous. They cut the branches of the pkau tree to make firewood on which they had sat, together with others; they cleaned their behinds, before they had defecated, etc.

One day, an old, blind man sat in the bai of Ngatmél, when a funeral of a rubak took place. On this occasion the boys made fun of him. They told him: It is night we want to wash ourselves. Migo crawled out of the house to the kim-clam shell to wash himself there. In the meantime women brought some sweet dishes. The boys ate and shouted to the blind man, asking him, what he was doing there. And they laughed about him. He said: I thought it was nighttime! — He was so angry that he sent a Ukál to the main place with the order to destroy Ngatmél. Then, people from there asked the other settlements for help and destroyed Ngatmél.

Story 28c.

Ngirabaliaū from Ngatmél lived in the cave Medóro, at the foot of the mountain. When he saw a school of fish approaching he threw some stones so skillfully that they entered the fishing trap.

Story 29. Catching Souls.

log.: bai 16 V^a, (bai 126 V^a).

Once upon a time, a galid-spirit woman lived with her husband in a house on top of the mountain Ngadég, on the northern headland of Babldáob.

The man was the friend of a delép-spirit. The galid-spirit woman had spread a net in order to catch souls and to eat them ¹. She caught the friend of her husband and suspended him from a tree close by the house. In the morning, when the man awoke and saw his friend hanging on the tree, he became very sad and cried. The woman asked for the reason of his sadness. He told her his friend was hanging there and so she said: You can take him, he may live! — Then his friend was again alive and returned home.

Story 30a. Diltegógo And Ngirateĩ.

And How Ngabúkěd Became So Rich.

log.: bai 63 S., bai 71 VII^b pl. 7^c, bai 103 II^a pl. 7^d, bai 112 III^b, bai 135 II^b.

Diltegógo, the sister of rubak I Tegógo of Gólei¹ was a thief². Many times she stole taro. Everyone in Gólei sang her name in the houses and in the fields, so that Tegógo was ashamed. He took his sister in a canoe and brought her to the reef Ptilateĩ, where he left her. While she was there, Ngirateĩ came in the form of the mangerengér-Banded sea krait³ and took her as his wife. One day, he asked her where she had come from and she replied: Gólekl. — Good, he said, soon we will go there. Then he grabbed her by her hair and dragged her swimming to Gólei. Now they lived there and Ngirateĩ went fishing for his wife. In the evening, when he came home he spew out the fish he had caught and always, they were big and beautiful animals. One day, he decided to organize a mur-feast, called galsiměr, for Diltegógo. He swam to his spirit-place and filled a big bag to the rim with galebúgěp and kluk pieces of money. He placed it into his shrine, the one that had been assigned to him. After the feast was over, he paid his debts with this money, and gave the rest to his wife.

In one of the following nights, the female friends of his wife slept in her house. Returning home he heard their conversation, how they asked Diletógo: Do you like to have such a husband? — She replied: I do not like him, nevertheless, I am shall stay with him, this is the best for me⁴. — When the snake heard this he got very angry, yet, he did not show his emotions. He delivered his fish and remained quiet until the next morning. When morning had broken Ngirateĩ said to the children, who belonged to Tegogo’s family: I am leaving; when nighttime comes, take a coconut frond, walk around the small ulangáng-spirit house and beat the floor with the fronds. —

— When the children did as they had been told, all the money that had been in there flew away. First the klikės ran to the canoe and took a punt. Some galebúgěp followed, then, came the other money pieces. They punted away and landed in Ngabúkěd. A piece of galebúgěp of the best Goutáog kind⁵ was the first one to step ashore in order to have a look what kind of place this might be. Therefore, these were the first ones. It entered a house, sat down, and ate. When it did not return a blěágěd followed in order to see what was happening. It went to the garbage heap and ate garbage⁵. When it also did not return the klsúk went to look for them. Only the following morning all the rest of them ran into the village; therefore Nagbúkěd is so rich.

¹ This was also the habit of Tekiěl máláp of the story 137.

² called munǵúps, see also story 157 about Gad ě gadúg etc. According to another interpretation, based on a logukl in bai 71 Ngěrulegaũ in a Imeúngs (pl. 7c), it was the woman’s vulva, which was stealing. This vulva was caught and brought to her brother, who locked it into a coconut shell. Then he called everyone together to celebrate a feast. In front of the congregation he opened the shell and, for everyone to see, the vulva jumped to its proprietress.

³ see also story 98 about Ilabangalũl.

⁴ in Palauan words: mǎngělměkl ra rengúk in my heart I tightly hold on to it; according to another information Ngirateĩ hired his girl friend Tipetip a kmĩğ from Gólei to watch out and she also informed him about what had been said. Following Tegogo’s bidding, Tipetip broke her almonds underneath the door of the house, this caused the money to disperse

⁵ see money in Vol. 3.

⁶ gongobitl garbage heap, a ulongál garbage.

Story 30b. Ngirateĩ’s Canoe.

The canoe of the gnome Ngirateĩ, who had the body of a Banded sea krait, came to the canoe house Goraderúl at the beach of Gólei. First, he celebrated a big feast there, then one in Gólei. Many women went to collect firewood. He called to them: While delivering it you say *moedi*¹ aidúngěl and put it down. Yet, the women simply threw the wood down without any apology. As a punishment all galebúgěp- money pieces flew out of the houses into the canoe. Two galid spirit left with the canoe. When they arrived in a Gol, on the western side, another galid spirit came to the canoe and wanted to have 1 piece of kluk-money and one madál a kluk. Both of them satisfied his wish and, since that day, at a feast people in Ngaregolóng pay only one kluk and half a kluk. The canoe turned into stone and is still standing next to the rubak-bai in Gólei.

Story 30c. Tegógo’s Fishing Canoe.

gongědĩl a Tegógo (see story 192); bai 48 III^a illustr. d.-pl. 25^e a. plate III^c.

maybe poss.: from gonged fishing trip, then it should be called “Tegéogo’s Fishing Trip”. It is supposed to be a special story, about which I did not learn anything.

Story 31a. Dragging the Corpse in Gólei¹ (Gotemátěl).

log.: bai 9 V^a illustr., bai 60 II^a illustr. KUB. VIII pl. 44^I, bai 63 III^a d.-pl. 7^e, bai 76 VI^a, bai 83 I, bai 86 I, bai 94 V^b, bai 107 V^a.

Once upon a time, a man died in Gólei¹, who left a big family behind. A vehement fight broke out about who had the right to bury the dead. On one side the 4 brothers and the sister of the deceased gathered, on the other side there were 4 daughters and two sons. Both parties pulled on each side. However, the last group could not keep up with the ferocity of the other side. Therefore, the brothers organized the funeral of the corpse. Both sides, though, each one separately, celebrated the funeral feast.

Story 31b. True Relatives(melil teragadál).

log.: bai 9 II^b illustr., bai 32 III^b d.-pl. 8^a, bai 14 II^a, bai 72 e. pl. VI^a.

Rubak I Tegógo had passed away and was laid out in his house. Then his relatives divided in opposed groups, each of which dug a grave to bury him.

Story 32. He Fell In The Space Between.

log.: bai 11 VI^b, bai 22 VII^a, bai 23 VII^b, bai 36 III^b, bai 61 II^b d.-pl. 7^f, bai 76 VI^b, bai 109 VI^a.

A boy lived in Kíok next to Gólei¹, who worked for both bai, a Ibai and Desóng. (According to some other information these were blai a Tkerděu and a Igár in Gólei¹). In both houses he cooked palm wine and he caught fish for both houses. Yet, each one thought the other one would take care of him and, thus it happened, that he fell on the bridge connecting both houses and died because of hunger². When he was dead, one housewife said: He always ate eel! and the other one: He always had goroviděl-trevally fish! Yet, when they communicated because of the syrup for the funeral feast, they realized that they both had given him nothing and that he had died of hunger. The woman from a Ibai said:

amaráel btil ě a ě kě rirépět a rě gokědeũl it went, his back one, and he fell in the space between;

ě rengmám a kmu kemangá ra Desóng. Our thinking said, you were eating in Desóng.

This is considered to be a warning of exaggerated work for two sides. —

¹ Samoa: tulóu, shouted as an apology because of noise, when people throw piles of wood on the ground.

² This means that in Palau it is impossible to survive without taro, the daily bread. In their households, people subsist because of women.

Story 33. Dingáladúi And Dupsgasél.

log.: bai 5 Vb.

Rubak I Tegógó in Gólei had a small daughter, called Dingáladúi, and rubak I Tugěřémél in Ngursár had a small son, called Dupsgasél. Both children started crying early on and it was impossible to placate them. One day, Tegógó put his small daughter on board of his canoe, trying and find something that would pacify the child. He sailed down the east coast of Babldáob, anchoring here and there. However, nothing impressed Dingáladúi. Only when the girl arrived in Ngurusár and saw Dupsgasél she stopped crying, just like the boy suddenly changed his behavior. Tugěřémél said to Tegógó: You have to stay here, because my son, who had been crying as long as we can think, was suddenly pacified when he saw your daughter; later on, we will go together to your village. — Tegógó agreed.

From now on, every day, the children played together and never separated. Later both families moved to Gólei, where they were married when they were of age. Soon afterwards, though, Dupsgasél got very sick and died. Dingaladúi remained alone in Gólei. Since that time, both houses, a Ukal in Gólei and a Klai in Ngurusár, stayed connected.

Story 34. The Breadfruit Tree Of Gólei (medú ra ietókl).

log.: bai 41 V^a pl. 8^b, bai 74 II^a, bai 83 IV^a, bai 94 II illustr. pl. XIV 13, bai 124 II^b d.-pl.8^a.

A breadfruit tree in Gólei had common roots with the breadfruit tree in Ngurusár. It gave birth to two children (according to another information only to 1 child). One of the two was brought by canoe to Ngarabáu, the other one to Ngarametóng, where couples took care of them and raised them, without knowing where they came from. Both children cried constantly. Thus, both foster parents together with their children were going and searching all over Palau. Finally, they came to the breadfruit trees and suddenly the children stopped crying. Now people knew their mother, and they were left alone for one day with the tree. The breadfruit trees stood in front of Tegógó's in Gólei and in front of blai a Klai in Ngurusár.

Story 35. The Two Brothers Who Caught One Fish With Two Hooks.

log.: bai 6 VII^b, bai 10 VIII, bai 11 I, bai 32 IV^b, bai 81 IV^a, bai 82 V^b, bai 85 III^b, bai 90 V^a, bai 113 V^b, bai 119 III^a d.-pl. 8^b, bai 142 II^a.

A man called Gokéok from Gólei went fishing to the big northern reefs. Geiegei from Nggēiangēl also sailed there. As chance would have it that both threw their lines at the same time and that one fish swallowed both hooks. When they hauled their lines in, the lines came together. Their fish was a ngungíědil, one fathom long. When they started talking to each other, the older one asked the younger one about his mother and when this one had told him her name, he said: this one is also my mother. Now they divided the fish: the older one received the head with the front part, the younger one the tail.

Story 36. How Ngaruau Fled Unnoticed From Gólei.

log.: bai 14 VI^b.

The rubak community Ngaruau from Ngabúkěd made a klegăđăol-visit in Gólei, in the Měangēl bai. As a rubak Bai it was formerly situated inland. When they all had assembled there, a man talked on behalf of a Guóng in Mangal'lang to Tegógó. He told him that Ngaruau wanted to destroy the 7 places of Ngaregolóng and that he should be careful.

Tegógó said nothing, but he constructed a ladder at the front gable, the madál a bai, on the west side, which looked into the bush. Then he said to the chiefs to leave after sundown via the ladder and to return home. When the time had come, Tegógó told the bai-girl to work on the lamp and to extinguish it supposedly by mistake. Thus, it happened that Ngaruau could escape without being seen by anybody. The next morning, when everyone from Ngaregolóng came under arms, in order to kill the chiefs, they found the bai empty and nobody knew how this could have happened. Therefore, Ngabúkěd and Golékl are still friends today log.: bai 4 VII^b, bai 52 IV^a aqu., bai 67 I, bai 85 V^a, bai 94 VI^a, bai 106 VI^b, bai 107 V^b.

Story 37. AlternateChants In Ngarabau (klakelál ra Ngarabau).

Once upon a time, the rubak slept in the bai of Ngarabau, while the young people amused themselves in the light of the moon, playing the so-called melíl a búiěl. When rubak I woke up because of the noise and could not longer fall asleep, he sent another rubak outside to chase them away. Yet, the emissary did not return and the game went on. The same happened with the second and the third messenger and so on until Gobak himself went to look and joined, too.

Story 38. How Rimirěg Burned The People Of Melekei In The Bai To Punish Them.

log.: bai 16 II^b d.-pl. 8^c.

Once upon a time, the powerful Melekei enslaved the settlements Ngěungěl, Ngarakěam, and Ngesüd in Ngaregolóng. One day, some men took a stroll from Melekei to Ngarakěam, where the rain surprised them. Thus, they took the roof of blai Gěsěrs as their umbrella and left. When the rain stopped they threw it on the savannah. The old woman, who had sat in blai Gěsěrs during this act of violence, no longer had any protection from wind and rain, she carried all her belongings, including the taro, to Ngěungěl to blai I a Iúngěl where Rimirěg the chief of the settlement lived. She complained of her suffering and he promised to repair the house for her. When this had been accomplished, he looked what could be done against the wrongdoers. First, he went to Melekei, in order to get a wife from there. When he had succeeded he organized a feast for her.

Then he sent a message to Peliliou, to the people from Ngasiás, they should make him a net from kémókom-common derris vines ¹ and they should deliver it at full moon, as he needed it the following night. At the set time, when the 3 Ngasiás people came to Ngěungěl, they sent a message to Melekei that they had arrived. Rimireg let them know that they should remain calm and wait for the following day. Next day the dance ngáis berebúr took place, executed together by the men and woman of Melekei. Remirěg told the women to take care of themselves and to dance until evening, then they should rest. On the following day the actual feast should take place. At sunset, the rubak sent a message to the 3 people of Ngasiás, to bring him the net. When they had brought it, they set it up at the back gable of the bai. Around midnight, when everyone was asleep, Rimiěreg set the front gable on fire so that in the Bai all men and women ran to the back when they woke up. They all fell into the net and burned. Then Rimirěg went to Ngěungěl to pay the 3 Nagsiás-people; because he did not have enough money, he gave them the privilege of klóu móngolungěl, the big delivery of bai girls. This is the reason why Ngěungěl had to deliver mongol to Ngasiás.

Story 39. How The Haughty Ngěđěkei Married Ngěđěbug.

log.: bai 15 IV^a illustr.

Ngěđěbug from Ngartól in Ngaregolóng was looking for a wife. Therefore, in a Meltól he went to see a mangălil-fortune teller, and asked him how he could become a rich man, maybe by catching dugongs.

¹ see story 39.

Together they made an experiment; they went to a lap-bush ¹, on which spiders dwell, and, based on their behavior, the fortune teller could divine the future. When this oracle was positive Ngëdëbug went home to fetch kemókom common derris vines ². He collected their fibers, dried them, and then twined a string from them. From this he made a net, and when this one was finished he cut the sticks for the net, in order to be able to position it vertically. Then he started with the construction of the two rūl-net wings, they also have to be positioned vertically with the help of sticks, so that the prey can be enticed into the net. After these preparations he caught two dugongs, which are very valued, because of their meat and especially because of their topmost cervical vertebra, used as bracelets, so he sold them at a high price. In this manner he made some money and now he directed his eyes towards Ngëdëkei, the daughter of Tegógo, of rubak I of Gólei. He also agreed and wanted to give Ngëdëkei to Ngëdëbug as his wife, yet, she refused. She thought she might get an even richer one. Her father told her that a refusal was rather embarrassing, but in the end they kept waiting.

Now Ngëdëbug took his net to a place called a Ilemasáng, where he soon caught an especially big sea cow. He brought it to the landing place Metëulogól in Gólei and blew the conch shell, in order to get Tegógo’s attention. Now, everyone rushed there in order to see the giant animal.

Only Ngëdëkei had remained behind, as she had told her brother to go and fetch her a bunch of betel nuts, an old coconut, and a young drinking nut. With these she wanted to win Ngëdëbug’s heart and to make up for her insults. When her brother had brought all three items, she first took the old nut, halved it in order to prepare some scrapings of the nut, because she wanted to clean Ngëdëbug’s hair from the saltwater. She placed the scrapings into the sheath of a coconut frond and went with it down to the beach, where she sat down on a geîër-sitting stone. She sent a boy to Ngëdëbug, inviting him to come to the shady place, where the scrapings of the nut were ready to wash his hair with it. Yet, he declined and he said, “I do not know her”! “Why should I get my táiu-scrapings from her?” When the girl heard this, she sent the boy a second time with the same order, yet, once again he denied. Now Ngëdëkei relayed to him, he should come and drink a coconut in the shadow, however, this did not help either. Then the girl thought about a way to bring the fisherman ashore. She decided to sing a galitūk-dancing chant. When she started all people of Gólei participated and Ngëdëkei was leading them while she danced and chanted. In the process she swung her grass skirt so high that Ngëdëbug was shocked and jumped on shore to save the aristocratic girl from further humiliation. She chanted:

Ngëdëbo, merékú riëmél, mëlängá tiél!
 Ngëdëbug come inland, he should get his coconut scrapings!
 Ngëdëbo, merékú riëmél, mëlängá gamelél!
 Ngëdëbug, come in, he should get his betelnut chew!
 Ngëdëbo, merékú, riëmél, mëlängá imelél!
 Ngëdëbug, come in, he should get his drink!

And then she shouted:
a Ngëdëbó, merékúí ě mél, ě kāmám ámerëgádá oeî, e mangīl ra Ngëdëbug.
 a Ngedebo, come in, we are in a hurry, oei, people are waiting for Ngedebug.

Then Ngëdëbug realized how big an effort the girl made; he agreed to the marriage and gave her the big sea cow he had caught as a present of love (gup), which she gave her father Tegógo. Thus, the money remained in the family of Tegógo.

¹ Abroma molle.
² Derris uliginosa.

Story 40. Tang I bad Nearby Ngaregúr.
log.: bai 62 V^a d.-pl. 8^d, bai 86 IV^b.

“The column-stone”¹ by the name Táng I bad is situated in-between the island Ngaregúr with its cave and the village Gólei on the northwestern headland of Babldáob. A monitor lizard, called golubás, lived there. One day, a fisherman came to the stone and tied his canoe there, and climbed on top of it. At once, the golubás attacked and devoured him.

Story 41. The Cunning Geróng.
log.: bai 117 I d.-pl. 29^a.

4 women were on a deathwatch in Ngeúngël. They strictly followed the rules of mourning and did not wash themselves. Only when they defecated, they cleaned themselves with water from the Tridacna shell in front of the house. Rubak Geróng noticed this and decided to play a trick on the women. He took some hot pepper, squashed it, and put it in the water. When the women came in order to wash themselves they got such an intensive burning sensation, that they doubled over on the floor because of the pain.

Story 42. The Much-Loved Dileáoldil.
log.: bai 95 III^a.

Dileáoldil was the daughter of the first woman Guódël’lágád from Ngëúngel in Ngaregolóng. Her father was rubak II from Ngatmél, where she moved when her mother had passed away. The younger sister of the deceased received the title in Ngëúngël. Yet, this one, too, died soon afterwards and Dileáoldil went there for the funeral. Now the family intended to give her the title. When she heard this, she said that she first had to go to Ngatmél, in order to ask her father and her relatives. These gave her the advice to accept the title, yet they did not want her to move to Ngëúngël, because everyone in Ngatmél loved her. Thus, Dileáoldil went again to Ngëúngël for the funeral, and also stayed on for the mourning and everything else. Though after the ceremony, she declared she had to go to Ngatmél and would be back again. When she took her leave, she stood in the compound and the woman of the place said:

a Dileáoldil ěa!
gobomrë re Ngatmél
ě kedi ² olăgâu ³ I mē a mēi
ě terëlél delál Ngëúngěl a di kalomesóil ⁴

l di mangīl rekau ěá ki di madál dmúiel

Dileáoldil he!
 When you go to Ngatmél,
 then we all look out until you return since this mother of hers from Ngëúngël does not eat anything (because of grief)
 in the evening,
 she is waiting only for you,
 her eye on the court exit

Now, Dileáoldil remained a long time in Ngatmél. One day, she said she had to go to Ngëúngël. Then the woman from Ngatmél shouted:

a Dileáoldil ěa!
ngak a rengúk a petík rekau ng sekedél ⁵ a udóud
ma k bo kusík ⁶ ak udóud

Dileáoldil he!
 my heart is longing for you,
 because I looked for money;
 and when I looked for my money,

¹ Compare with the fork shaped stone of Matáng re ngós, story 8 and 30a.
² kedi = kid“we” intensified, it.ki.
³ olăgâu to look around, when someone comes up quickly.
⁴ ka causative particle; omesóil to have dinner.
⁵ mesékéd to look for money.
⁶ osík to look for; akudóud, not ududek.

ng dik ¹ éa a Ileáng
koldik ² nglái ³ mek ngára Ptilateĩ ma Ngorót ⁴
ě medi kulilt ⁵ regěko rekau
l di mēgěsepđárt ⁶

then there is none in a Ileáng.
I wished I would be taken to Ptilateĩ and Ngorót, that I could choose and give you only a piece of money worth a hundredfold.

Dileáoldil did not remain long in Ngěungěl, but soon returned back to Ngatmél, where, in the course of time, she became rubak II of the village. However, she often visited her former home place and constantly moved back and forth.

Story 43. The Abandoned Galibosáng.

log.: bai 117 w. illustr., bai 135 VI^b.

One day, a Ilikéd I dil from a Ulegetóng in Ngaramlungúi send a message to Ngěúngěl in Ngaregolóng, that people should come and fetch her as móngol. When she arrived, the entire men’s club had assembled in the Bai and they asked her whom she desired most. A small betelnut chew, a gamágěl, was prepared and offered to her together with a name. She, however, refused and did so with all the names that followed, until finally Galibosáng was mentioned. Now she accepted the gamágěl and chewed it. Then the men said: Tomorrow you have to get the sleeping mat from Galibosáng’s house! — The first night Ilikéd I dil slept alone in the bai, because it was a tradition in old Pelau that whoever touched the móngol first, also had to pay for her.

The following day, when she came into Galibosáng’s house, he said: How can you choose me? I am suffering from such an ugly disease. — Galibosáng actually was covered with purulent ulcers, and therefore, he was not allowed into the bai. Therefore, in the following days Ilikéd I dil always slept alone in the bai, but during the day she came to Galibosáng’s house, where she could care for him, yet, according to custom, she, a móngol, was not allowed to sleep with him. She prepared coconut scrapings for his hair, brought him to the bathing place, and helped him back home.

One day he asked her why she had chosen him, and she replied that at home she had heard his name and then she had set her mind to choose him. Galibosáng continued to ask: When the galeás-food delivery comes at the end of your stay, will you then marry me? — She said yes. Then he gave her a klúk as goredēm-advance money and half a klúk (madál a klúk) as bus wedding present. When Galibosáng had paid the gorédēm, Ilikéd I dil said: We are leaving tomorrow; take the bamboo raft and wait in the middle of the channel until we are coming. Then I will get on board of your raft and my people will leave. Then we both come back. Next day, when Ilikéd I dil and her people came with the canoes, they saw an empty raft in the channel, because Galibosáng had climbed a tree ⁷. They recognized his raft. Ilikéd I dil had told her people that in case someone should shout, they should not turn around, but they should continue to leave and not look back.

They heard him but did not look back. He clapped his hands, called her name, reminded her of her promise, but Ilikéd I dil did not turn around. She chanted:

¹ dik = diak not.

² oldik to expel.

³ nglai from ngu to take.

⁴ see story 30^a and story 9.

⁵ melilt to choose.

⁶ megěšép value; dart hundred, this means a precious piece of money

⁷ according to another information she had ordered him to climb a mangrove, so that her people would not be shocked when first seeing him.

a kēloiengě ¹ kluk
a ma lagá ² ra urěgělél ³ madál go bem ngai ⁴
e kau a kelek úngil makmelai rekau
l bagík l mora Ulegetóng a tekingém ⁵ a Galibósa di lengá ku ra regnúm
e ak mogú ⁶ omakál.
kau bom logedí ⁷
a tak ⁸ l mo omakál
a Ilikëregnúm a di mekngit éi
e arengúk a di úngil ng direkák dēdák l bád ⁹ ng kol ngódog ¹⁰ telikák a direkák logólt ¹¹.

you have given one kluk put an additional small piece (do you think) you had brought this payment?
and maybe you would be beautiful and I bring you as my husband to Ulegetóng?
your speech, Galibosáng,
just keep in your heart,
as I am about to sail. He replied:
you want to break (the tie)
you go on board in order to sail o Ilekéd I dil, your heart is bad but my heart is good.
We have not yet slept with each other?
Maybe you think of another kind of sleep,
that would not yet be obvious?

Story 44. How A Husband Tested His Wives.

log.: bai 48 III^b d.-pl. 8^e a. pl. IIC, bai 55 IV^a, bai 152 V^a.

A man in a Iebúkúl had a sister and three wives. He brought all the fish and other things to his wives, though nothing to his sister. One day, he had he idea to find out which one of his three wives loved him the most. He decided to rub red ginger on himself and to pretend to be dead. His friend was assigned to bring his corpse on board of the canoe. When this one arrived, the three women remained quietly on the pier, while his sister jumped into the water to meet the canoe. Thus, he found out, how it was about love and from then on brought his best catch to his sister.

Story 45. The Prisoner In The Basket.

log.: bai 60 VI^b d.-pl. 8^e, bai 107 III^b, 151 VII^b.

In the old days no head was cut off, instead the whole man, dead or alive, was brought as a trophy. Then one day, it happened in Ngaregolóng that the winner carried away a living prisoner in a basket on his head. During the journey he bit the hands of one after the other, so that basket was handed from one to the other, until finally one person held on to it from the bottom. Therefore, people now cut off the head, so that the prisoner can no longer cause any harm.

Story 46. Galaióng And Galapúp, The Captured Devils.

log.: bai 8 III^a illustr., bai 40 VI^b d.-pl. 8^f.

People from Ngartmóng in Ngaregolóng caught fish in the passage Garásěg. When they lifted their fishing baskets, they found two human beings inside. They took the baskets on shore, where one of the two prisoners, called Galaióng, escaped by slipping into the ground.

¹ from ngu to give, to take.

² from omeliáng, to put.

³ probably poss. of górau marriage-money, and accordingly gorágěl.

⁴ this means this should be a compensation?! It is also said ng madál ak me kliangmadál to pay back a debt in contrary of the interest rate. The woman is enraged about the small sum that he gave her, as she had devoted herself to him, a sick man.

⁵ from tokói the speech.

⁶ mogung to be about to do something

⁷ from melógéd to tear apart WALL.

⁸ from tmak or tngmak (WALL.) to go on board.

⁹ mobad to place oneself. Instead of this line, there is sometimes also another one: ng direkák o borbab, ng direkák morióu

¹⁰ ngódog different, other; telikák to sleep with spread legs.

¹¹ ologólt, to reveal. Also debo rengí.

But they took Galapúp, the other one with them. However, this one continuously danced, while Galaióng followed him underground, constantly calling Galapúp. When they reached Galáp, this one also escaped from them because of a fit of rage. They followed the escapee all the way to the stone path a Ililâu at the dockyard Ngarepesóng, where a hole is situated, in which Galapúp disappeared. This hole is called blil a desiu “house of the earthquake”. (Today, it is overgrown by a root system). When rubak Ngiraróis heard this, he was very angry about it.

Story 47. Ngirakikimói, The Once More Accepted Husband.

log.: bai 4 II^a, gërabai Vol. 5 illustr. 5^d.

The woman Boliei, the daughter of Tegogó in Golei, had chosen Ngirakikimói as her husband, who presumably came from Mógemog. Her mother, though, was not interested in this man, instead she had her eye on rubak I a Guóng from Mangal‘láng. Around that time, the old woman got very sick. A turtle and a pig were brought in order to reconcile the family’s galid spirit. But a Guóng could not pay any money for the animals. Then the daughter went to Ngirakikimói, who caught with his nets, in the vicinity of Ngaregúr, many fish and turtles and 1 mámël-Napoleon wrasse, which he brought to the old woman so that she recovered.

Story 48. The Unfaithful Diraderúbök And Why The North Rules Over The South.

log.: bai 129 VI^a d.-pl. 9^a.

Goddess Gobiróu and god Gorekím ¹ lived in the northern sky. They had two daughters Tualóng and Madadmátk. A man in the north, called Mangaróu, wanted to marry Madadmátk, yet when another man, called Ngira derúbök, from the southern heaven also courted her, then she turned to this one, married him, and moved with him to the south. On this occasion the mother Gobiróu talked to her other daughter Tualóng: Why don’t you marry Mangaróu! She agreed and so Tualóng married Mangaróu. Soon afterwards the mother Gobiróu died. Then the father Gorekím sent for his two daughters, to come home. Tualóng soon arrived, yet Madadmátk only sent a message that she would arrive the following day. However, when the day elapsed without the arrival of Dira derúbök, the mother was buried.

All women had assembled in order to stay five days in the mourning-house. In the course of this time, Dira derúbök arrived, carrying a coconut as a gift in her hand. Her father scolded her and shouted: Shame on you, that you come so late and do not bring anything. — She did not answer, took her nut and went to the other side of the gólbed-platform in front of the house. There she cut it open with a gongoseliól ²-hammer, despite the fact that custom allowed this only on the 5. day. Then the father shouted angrily at her: Dira derúbök, you followed your heart and your love, you moved to your husband, to the south. Should you have any children, they shall be ugly, stupid and dark; though, those of your sister will be clever, beautiful and light skinned, and they shall rule over your children!

—This really happened. Therefore, the north became rich and ruled over the south.

The following proverb is still in use in Palau, even today:

Sel blai ra Derúbök ³ a gabul	That house of Derúbök is poor
a bill a Magáda petók a ngarár ngi	but the house of Magád has a lot for him

¹ see morning “dawn” róu and “rainbow” .

² see funeral celebrations

³ derúbok supposedly means: to give away again what you had received, thus, not to be able to retain; magád title for an old woman; ngar “existence, life” (WALL.)

Story 49. Ngirakaderáng Or

How Goréör And Mangal‘láng Became Friends.

Ngirakadëráng from the 1. family in Ngarekeai (a Imelik) went all over Palau looking for large tree trunks for kabékl-war canoes. Because a Imelik wanted to wage war on Goréör. When all canoes were finished, he ordered the eastern fleet to be stationed in front of Melekéiok and the western fleet in front of Ngarekeai, in a Imelik. This was a war of revenge. For one day, people from a Imelik had been fishing in the lagoon, among them was Ngirakaderáng, who in those days was still a boy. When they pulled up the fish traps, some young people from Goréör, the Gërungül, rowed over and attacked them next to the small islet Gokerdül, close by at Ngarekeai. All the people from a Imelik were killed with the exception of Ngirakaderáng, whom they spared because he was destined to become the highest person of a Imelik. He was taken along, but he did not want to sit on the outrigger board, but preferred to sit with the slain bodies and the fish that had been caught. While sitting there an ilamrókl-fish, a green monacanthus, bit him in the thigh so that the teeth of the animal stuck together and the fish could not get off anymore.

When Ngirakaderáng arrived in Goréör, he went from Sägámús up to the bai a Dngöróngër. The bai girls of the men’s house managed to remove the fish and in the memory of the event they tattooed him a fish on his leg. After some time, Ngirakaderáng returned home to Ngarekeai and thought about revenge; how to avenge the disgrace upon the people of Goréör.

When the war party had assembled, a Guóng from Mangal‘láng expressed his opinion that Goréör must be destroyed. He sent a message to Ngarabau in order to borrow the canoe Gorogorói ¹, but they did not want to part with it. Therefore, the warriors of Nagregölong angrily constructed a big raft, made it sea worthy, and put a lot of provisions on board, especially the preserved coconut uléld, as they could not know how long this journey would take. Ngirasuókl, the brother of Guóng, embarked as its commander and sailed the raft far outside to Goréör, so that nobody could see what was happening and betrayed the plan. People of Goréör quickly got ready for war.

When the enemies approached, they hid with their war canoes behind the stone dam of a Delúi. All their punt poles were so short that they could not be seen from the sea. The enemy gathered next to the small island Ngátmëduk at the northern headland of Goréör. From there, they advanced to the headland Gëtgëti nearby Iebúkül. However, the Goréör-people went with their canoes behind the long and high bridge Ngarelamaïs, from where they suddenly broke forth. A part of them came through the passage Delebëgël and another one outside around the landing bridge. Since the warriors had tied the wide and stiff leaf blades of the areca palm in front of the vessel bows, so the water shot up high when the attack began. Shocked the men from Babldáob fled and were chased all the way to the estuary Kngabárd of the mangrove channel next to Goikül. There the Goréör-warriors captured the already mentioned war-canoe Gorogorói from Ngarabau. Many were killed and the winners took their bodies with them, leaving them on the bridge Nagrekamaïs. Many people from a Imelik died, too, and their canoe were brought to Goréör.

The people of Mangal‘láng, who had helped the victorious men of Goréör, remained a long time as their guests in the south. One day Ngirakerekúr III from Ngarbagéd was in high spirits and made fun of them. They beat him to death with the consent of Goréör. Only afterwards there was total peace. When, the Mangal‘lang-people wanted to return home to the north, a Idebul filled for the people, who were about to leave, a big wooden bowl with iláót-coconut syrup and water.

¹ obviously the name of the bush Mussaenda- ger’regegöi.

When the vessel was empty, people found at the bottom a piece of br‘rak-money. Gád lbai II of Mangal‘lang took it, went to a Ibědul, and said, “keep it! It is ours! Save it for us! We do not want any reward. We helped you out of friendship. In case we get attacked, then you will help us!”

a Ibědul took the money and since that time a treaty of friendship exists between the two of them. Mangal‘lang-people could not be attacked on Goréör. They had taught them the use of reserve troupes in a fight, how to divide the armed forces into four parts, which take turns fighting, they had stood beside them in war and had helped them win. Thus, people from Ngaregolóng went home full of satisfaction, the only prize they took with them was the canoe Gorogorói.

Story. 50. Bekěu rebbóděl ¹,
The Courageous One From Ngarebóděl And The Betrayed Gougelúiěb From Ngrıl.

log.: bai 95 III^b.

Ngabúkěd in Ngarárd had a fight with Ngaregolóng. Once, when a fight had just begun, Gougelúiěb, covered entirely with turtle shell, ran into the thick of the fight and killed many, because he could not be harmed. For the next attack of the enemy, people from Nagbúkěd sent a message to Ngarebóděl on Goréör and asked Bekěurebóděl to come and help them. He asked: What is happening? — The Ngarárd-people replied: All of Ngarárd is ngomadáng, completely dead. — Then he agreed to come with them. They placed his spears on board of the kabékl-canoe, brought him on board, and travelled north. After Bekěurebóděl had landed, he went to Ngěóng, in Ngabúkěd, and people there sent a message to Ngaregolóng, that they wanted to fight the next day. On the following day, they all went to a Urúng to the exit of the harbor. At low tide they marched from there to Goketól ². Then they all sat down in a Gól and waited for the arrival of the warriors of Ngaregolóng. First came Gougelúiěp and, with the spear in his hand, he made oráel. Then Bekěu rebóděl got up and came forward against him. When he was close to his enemy, he said: Come, sing kerekír, then I will sing oldiu ³. — Gougelúiěp replied: No, first you do kerekír, then I will do oldiu. Because he thought this would be finer. Then Bekěu rebóděl first did kerekír, then Gougelúiěp sang his oldiu, Yet, Bekěu stood ready with two spears, one in each hand. First he threw one with the left hand and, when Gougelúiěb jumped into the air, he quickly hurled the second one with the right hand, hitting him straight into the mouth so that he died instantly.

Then the Ngaregolóng-people ran away in fright. On the tip of the spear Bekěu transported his dead enemy to Ngarárd and when people wanted to give him a piece of money as a reward, he refused to take it. Then they asked him what he wanted. He said: When I come on a klegădáol-visit from Goréör, I go to Ngěóng, there the Ngarebóděl-people have their own klegădáol, and when they find something good, a canoe or something else, then they can take it with them! — So the Ngarárd-people agreed, and this custom is still practiced today.

In addition, people from Ngarebódel received a stone as a present, which is still standing there today. According to another information, the stone in Ngěsáng and the water trench (goeáol) there belong until today to the people of Ngarebódel. When they come and deposit a leaf in front of the spring, then the women are not allowed to fetch water there, until the permission is bought from the strangers for the price of one madál a kluk. For it was a man from Ngěsáng, who should have brought the great spear of Bekěu into the bai, but he could not find it, because only a tree trunk was lying on top of it, which the galid spirit fetched himself.

¹ KUB. V, p. 24 Pagéu Rbódol and Ougolúyup; the story is a short summery; the warrior had a spear, thicker than a human thigh, which, while singing, he stuck into the mouth of the horned one.

² Landing place of Mangal‘lang.

³ kereríkír means to sing in a falsetto voice with an r pronounced by the tongue vuririririri; oldiu is tosing in a fine high pitched tone uí.

Story 51. The Beautiful Rěgěkéd From Ngarabău.

Rěgěkéd, a younger brother of rubak III, Tegúr from Nagabúkěd in Ngarárd, lived in Ngarabău. He was a beautiful man and women loved him. Thus, the wife of Ngiragětumăi liked to see him, and feigned a family relationship, in order to come close to him without causing a scandal. She slept with him. One day, a new roof was made on the rubak-bai in Ngabúkěd and Tegúr sent Rěgěkéd a message to come and help. He came and helped to procure sug-nipa leaves and golúkl-bamboo sticks, needed to thatch a roof.

When everything was ready Tegúr sent Rěgěkéd to his house in order to get a string to tie the leaves to the roof. In the upper part of the house was a big cupboard with the string inside. Underneath sat the wife of Tegúr. Rěgěkéd told her to move aside a bit, but she replied that she could not do so, because she had to weave. In those days, men went around stark naked. When Rěgěkéd climbed up, the woman tried to grab him around his penis, but he slapped her hand aside, took the string, and returned to the bai. There he finished his nglósög-part of the roof, yet, he felt uncomfortable because of what had happened. Therefore, after the mur-feast, he brought his brother’s share to this one’s house, gathered his spears and went to Ngaramedei in Ngarárd, where he slept the following night with his girlfriend. In the following nights he did the same in a Ulimáng, in Ngarepkei, Ngaragamelil, Ngaragobatáng, a Ulangaráng, and in Keklău. From there he went to Táog, south of it, then to Ngivál.

Everywhere he took leave from his girlfriends, since he was longing for death, because he no longer wanted to see the wife of his brother. On the beach of Belód he challenged the people of Ngivál with his spear, but they did not respond, because Ngivál was a tributary of the people of Ngarárd. Mer‘rongór realized that Rěgěkéd’s behavior had to have a certain reason. Therefore, he ordered his people to capture Rěgěkéd, which they did. Mer‘rongór asked him what had happened to him, yet he remained silent and said he only wanted to have fun. Thus, they brought him to the village without any trouble. In Ngaragelúk, in blai I Ngaruěós, a woman was pregnant. While she stood in the taro patch, she gazed at Rěgěkéd, because he looked so handsome. He thought, when I kill her, they will also kill me. That was what happened. He speared the woman and at once the men of Ngivál attacked him and knocked him down. They transported his body to the rubak-bai and placed him on the gomróěel-stone ¹, so that everybody could see the beautiful man.

In the meantime in Ngaregolóng, Ngiragětumăi had heard what had happened between his wife and Rěgěkéd. When news of his death had arrived there, the rubak ran to Ngivál, cut off Rěgěkéd’s penis, and took it to Ngarabău. There, he cut it into small pieces, added the juice of some coconut kernel, and prepared a dish. When his wife returned from the taro patch and asked for food, he said: Here is something good, come in and eat, I had already enough! — After she had eaten he told her what kind of dish it had been. She said: Why did you not tell me beforehand? — she broke the cooking pot and licked it dry, to anger her husband. Then Ngiragětumai tried to poison her with gongut. She only got blind and sickly, but stayed in the house. Ngiragětumai took a second wife and every time, when he went to sleep in the other side of the house, he told the blind woman so. She, however, only replied: Good! —Rěgěkéd was buried in Ngivál.

Story 52. The Club Of Utáoěr And The Betelnut Palm Of Ngěsisěg.

(galépěd ra Utáoěr ma búög ra Ngesisěg).

log.: bai39 II^b d.-pl. 9^a, bai 95 VI^b, bai 152 VI^{a. a. b.}.

A family lived in Utáoěr, a now extinct village north of a Gol in Ngarárd. It was so rich that many were jealous of its wealth. People of the settlement attacked the house, killed the old people and left two boys alive log.: bai 73 III^a d.pl. 9^b, bai 117 e.

¹ see illustr. 37 in Vol. 2.

Story 56. How a Ilói Experienced Satisfaction.

In Ulimáng, a gagerákl, a community of 7—10 young women, who helped each other working in the taro patch, used to go to the beach in the evening. They wanted to cool down in the evening breeze and to conduct their love affairs in the bush. Only one woman, a Ilói, had no lover, because she suffered from ulcers. One day, when she was sitting rather depressed on the beach, a Guóng, rubak I from Ngësáng, passed by, carrying an almond dish, which he wanted to sell in Ngivál. She asked him for a small gamágěł-chew and told him about her suffering, that all she was allowed to do was looking after the baskets of the pleasure-seeking women. The chief was so moved, that he gave her as gamágěł the almond dish and an additional piece of kluk-money. Then, he returned home. When the female companions of a Ilói came, they had nothing; a Ilói distributed the miěg-almond dish among them and had a good laugh at them.

Story 57. Kěraĩ lě galíd And The Sun-Child Of Ngabúkěd.

log.: bai 25 VIII d.-pl. 9^c.

A woman from blai VII Ngaremióu in Ngabúkěd was working on the stone-path. When she came home, she heard shouting in the undergrowth Gatěágěł. At once she followed the noise and shouted: If it is a man, then it will be my man, if it is a galíd, then it will be my galíd! — Then her eyes could suddenly see and she saw a woman, who was just giving birth, assisted by some spirits. She joined them and asked for the child¹. It was handed over to her and from now on she cared for the small boy. He grew older and when he had grown up, he became Kěraĩ, rubak I. One day, an egg fell unexpectedly on the stone rectangle of the rubak-bai of Ulimáng. A woman from blai V a Irúng found it there and put it in a basket to eat it later ². But she forgot about it. On the following day, when she wanted to eat it, a small girl was lying in the basket. The woman brought her up. She grew up quickly. One day, she washed herself with a coconut shell in the bath water Gongdúng. Then Kěraĩ saw her and had her family give her to him as his wife. Then her mother came down from heaven and said: You are poor and the daughter of an unmarried woman; I cannot give you anything. However, I still want to bring something to eat. — Thus, she sent bananas and sweets down from heaven to Kěraĩ’s house. Soon afterwards Kěraĩ got sick and his wife took care of him. Yet, one day when people looked for both of them, they had disappeared. In their memory the family erected two graves in Ngabúkěd, one in Ngategúr next to Bai Měangědil, the other one besides the rubak-bai Ngaruaũ, where today stands the bridge.

Story 58. Gobagád ruaũ ³,
The Female Constructor Of Ngabúkěd.

Gobagád lived on the wooded mountain Ngél, in-between Ngivál and Ngardmaũ. There, she gave birth to the daughter Dilmorórou, named after the sunset glow rou, because she was so beautiful and her skin shimmered like the evening sky (see story 48). When she had grown up, some people from Melekeok went to visit ⁴ Ngardmaũ

¹ comp. with story 82c.

² comp. with story 19.

³ uaũ “crazy”

⁴ According to another account, Kloulúbak came from Keklaũ and a Ráklaĩ from Melekéiok to visit Ngarekeaĩ. On the savannah they found the daughter of Gobagád, who was called Gad i delángel; a Ráklaĩ married her. According to a third account, based on the logukl in Bai Blis-sang in *a*lmeungs (bai 75 IIib), a woman from blai VIII Goperdóng in Ngaragělūk (Ngivál) came to the savannah, when Gobagád gave birth to a child that cried. The woman ran up and down but could not see anything. Since the spirits sitting there were afraid that she would trample down everything, they gave her the power to see. She, therefore, found the child and quietly sat down next to it. The spirits told the woman the child should be hers. Then she took it with her to Ngivál. But soon she grew tired of the cry-baby, because it constantly screamed and cried. Therefore, she prepared an aulěld-dish and brought the little one back to the savannah, where she had found it. There she deposited the girl together with the food. Then she went back home. Soon Gobagád came and said to the crying child: Do not cry, I am your true mother. — Now the child stopped crying and she took it, together with the food, home to a Ibéars. The girl grew up quickly and one day, when she was an adult and basking in the sun, a Raklaĩ took her as his wife.

and came via Roisingél ¹. They saw a luminescent spot in the woods, they encircled it and found Dilmorórou. When the rubak came, the young people told them that they had caught a beautiful woman. When Těmakai, rubak XI, saw the girl, he shouted: Hold her fast, she will be my wife. Thus, she was taken along to Ngardmaũ, where they stayed for two days. Then Těmakai sent word to his wife in Melekéiok to move out of his house. On their way back, when they passed again the mountain, Dilmorórou said: Take a little break, I want to see my mother! — Now, she told her mother that she was married with Těmakai. The old woman agreed and said: At night, when you hear something drop outside of your house, then do not go outside and also prevent others from doing so, because then your 7 brothers, the gěuid ketórd ² are coming to bring you ³ fish, turtles, etc. If you wait a while you will be able to see everything. Těmakai should distribute them among his sisters. They will come every two nights. — This really happened. Těmakai’s sisters were really delighted.

They asked her, where she came from, because they wanted to prepare a feast for her. After that the rubak asked his wife what kind of a feast they should prepare. Dilmorórou replied: I want to ask my old mother. — She went to the mountain Ngél and asked her mother. She answered: After tomorrow, you all sail with the canoes up the coast, and wherever you see smoke you go on shore ⁴. The daughter reported this in Melekéiok. In the meantime Gobagád went at night with her 7 sons to Desóngong, on the western coast, and began to construct a village there. However, one of the sons climbed on top of Rois i ngáng ⁵, from where he saw the place of Ngabúkěd, which they all like much more. A bars-tree stood there. It was called Barsruaũ. The mother went there ⁶, while the 7 galíd spirit walked underground and lifted the ground. On the land Ngaruaũ, where the tree stood, they built the Bai ruaũ and then the village ⁷. While they worked there, they heard some noise in the east. Gobagád sent one son to see what was happening there.

He found people who were just about to build the place Galáp. He suggested they all help first to finish Ngabúkěd, then they would all together finish Galáp. They, however, said they wanted to finish first Galáp, then they would come to help on the other side. So it happened. When they had finished their work, Gobagád gave the Galáp-people a stone by the name of Ngarárd I bad that had the characteristic to make people strong and courageous and that gave the place its name Ngarárd, only later this name referred to the entire area. As a gift sent in return, the woman received a stone. When she washed it, a canoe filled with money came from the island Ngorót and it made Ngabúkěd rich⁸.

When Těmakai and his people saw the smoke, they sailed towards the shore. The group had considerably grown, because people from Ngěraměš, from Ngaremelég, from Ngěruliang, and Ngivál had joined, when the group passed by.

¹ Obviously this is the wooded mountain a Uluóng that also seems to be called Rois ingél; close by is the settlement of the former village Desongóng. In the vicinity of a Uluóng is also a savannah with the red earth, called Gobagád (see district II Ngarárd —p.-vol. 2)

² see story 19.

³ the delivery of food telegúl from relatives to a married couple.

⁴ The same story is reported about rubak a Regósog from Ngarebökö and the woman Dengdanggabeũ. She supposedly came from Ngivál (from a Ibüg), but a certain Dengdang biúl is known from the vicinity of Melekéiok (see Vol. 2), who seems to be the one. She asked her mother where the kikeruaũ-feast should take place. This one said: Load all canoes from the east and the west with taro and sail up the coast, until you see smoke, then you go on shore. — This they did. When the canoes of the west came to Ngardmaũ and the ones from the east to Keklaũ, they saw smoke in Ngabúkěd. The landed on both sides and carried all the food up to Ngaruaũ. All galid spirit were invited to the feast.

⁵ see the view from this mountain on illustr. 37 in Vol. 1.

⁶ another informant reported that Gobagád went from Ngátpang underground to Ngabúkěd and lifted the land. In story 1 a. 2 about a Guáp we hear that Ngabúkěd and Galáp were separate, when the archipelago was created. Only the galidspirit -woman Merúpelaũ (see story 14) united them when she sprinkled the ked a Iruáng with ashes.

⁷ She supposedly also gave birth to a son, called Teruaũ melengés, here or in Desongóng. His grave is shown next to the rubak-bai in Ngbúkěd.

⁸ see also story 30 a

In Taptár, the eastern landing place of Ngabúkěd, they went on shore, walked up, and built houses for the feast. Then came the big kikeruâu-feast, that Těmakai paid with his money. After the feast, he returned to Melekéiok together with Dilmorórou, while Gobagád remained in Ngabúkěd and she became its galid spirit. Today, when people see fog around the Rois i ngél, they say it is the smoke of gotúl a Gobagád.

Besides the information provided in Vol. 2, the following is reported:

When Gobagád came to the north, she lived in Gokúl pélau ¹. During her stay there, the stingray Gaterúl l ked ² came out from the depth of the sea, devoured people wherever he could get a hold of them, and then went back into the water. Then, she said to the boys of the house Meróng, “help me to catch him!” — The boys started, made their preparations, and prepared some spears. One day, when the stingray came again, they surrounded it and speared it. When he was dead they cut it in pieces. Then Gobagád took the meat for herself and gave the boys the bones, while she said, “here you have the meat and I keep the bones!” — When the boys reached their home, they talked about what had happened and they got angry. They painted themselves black, went to her house, where they danced and sang:

Gobagád ra ked, mesagák, a mesagák, mesagák,

Gobagád from the hill, look at me, look at me, look at me, a mēlobó l mesúběd a rengum!

so that you well understand your heart!

So she ran away into the bush, where she turned around and shouted: My house and all that is inside belongs to you; I go into the bush. When you come into the woods to cut wood or to fell trees, first call my name. Then everything will work out well!

Story 59. Túlei, Who Beheaded His Beloved.

log.: bai 75 VII^a, bai 98 IV^a, bai 103 VII^b.

High chief Mad from Ngabúkěd had an eye on Súrěg from Ngivál. He knew that Túlei from Kekláu was her lover. When he met him one day, he told him he should bring him Súrěg. This angered Túlei so much, that he decided to take revenge on Mad. Soon afterwards, he met Súrěg in the bush of Ngeráir in the vicinity of Ngivál. First he slept with her until evening. Then he took his gareál-knife, made of shark’s teeth, and clicked his tongue in disgust. Súrěg got restless and asked him what was wrong with him. Then he said: Something evil is in me, yet, I do not dare to talk about it.

— She reckoned what he was thinking and what had happened and she said: Why can’t you talk about it? But wait, I will talk to you:

a Túlei, mo kerotír ³ arengúk

ng golúiuup a tangetengetél ⁴ a klsáu

makleáld a toúr ⁵

ma klekólt a dúger ⁶ re kau

l talagás ⁷ l diak omgúpăgup

Túlei, dry is my heart

love is like the tortoise shell of the lime container;

warmth makes it rich

and the cold makes you strong

the man has no pity,

¹ meaning “anchor of Pelau”. It seems that this is the fishing spot of story 14; in Vol. 2, the stone Ogul Pelau is called the fishing line. This should be called Gokúl.

² Vol. 2, mentioned as Derul.

³ rotir from marát dry wood.

⁴ tanget, the pluck, the head of the tortoise shell on the stick-like lime container. It is used to put lime on the chew.

⁵ metět rich.

⁶ medúg strong; chubechúb pity WALL.

⁷ obviously tal a gad the one man.

a derderél ¹ a klsáu

a di songerém ² l bád ra kéd

l manga ardagél ³ a gerságěl

ě Túleil mangabūl ⁴.

as it is destined by love.

when we were hungry and lying on the hill and were eating the fruits of the nutmeg tree

Túlei, then we were poor.

After she had spoken, she tossed her hair over her face, bent her head, and said: Go ahead! — Then Túlei cut off her head.

At the same time, Mad celebrated a feast in Ngabúkěd and Túlei thought he could use the head for it. When Túlei announced his arrival to Mad, this one said: Good bring her along! — But when the rubak only found the head in the basket, he got very angry and gave the order to kill Túlei. Túlei, though, escaped to Kekláu. Mad gave the head to friends of his wife, who rubbed it with ginger, sew it into some mats, and buried it.

Story 60a. The Story Of Teguliaur In Ngabúkěd And The Destruction Of Ngivál.

log.: bai 56 VI^a d.-pl. 9^b, bai 104 I, bai 107 IV^b.

A woman from Ngeaur was móngol in Ngardolólók. One day, the rubak from there made a klegădăol-visit in a Iebúkūl in Ngaregolóng. The móngol, who was pregnant from Gobak ra luił went with them. When three days were over, they sailed to the north, around Ngaregúr, then down the western coast. At nightfall, they went ashore in Ngabúkěd, in order to sleep there. Tegúr, Rubuk III from Ngabúkěd saw that the móngol was close to giving birth and he took her to his blai Ngēlengi, where she gave birth to a son at night. The next morning, the mother of Tegúr said: The woman cannot travel. Leave her here, I will wash her with hot water and will give her medicine. Later on, Gobak can come and fetch her. — Thus, Gobak travelled south and sent a message to the parents of the móngól, about their daughter’s confinement. They came in a kaberúog-long distance canoe from Ngeaur to Pelíliou, took Gobakraluił on board and sailed together with him to Nagbúkěd. Tegúr told the arrivals: Leave the woman and her boy with me, since I do not have any relatives. He shall be my brother. — Gobak, though, replied: When people from Ngivál come, and behave with you as they please, then they will mistreat my son. This, I do not want.

— However, when Tegúr contradicted and begged a long time, Gobak finally consented. Thus, he returned with the parents. Tegúr treated the child like his own. Later on, when the parents came to fetch their daughter, they left the boy in Ngabúkěd.

When the boy had grown into a young man, his father Tegúr died. Soon afterwards, people from Ngivál came and insulted him because he was the son of a móngol. He remained silent, but did not forget it. They did not know that he came from Ngeaur. People looked for a new Tegúr. Then his mother said: My son should be it! — and he agreed to be called Teguliaur. In his position as rubak he only thought of making money. He told his men’s club that they would have to work for it together to get it. They built a cooking house to prepare syrup and stored the money they had earned into the bamboo poles of the floor. One day, he said to his club-companions: It is lunch time, all of you should go to the palm trees farthest away, clean them, and work towards the house. — When all of them were away, cleaning the palm trees and fetching fire wood, Tegauliaur took the money out of the bamboo poles, set the house on fire and ran as quickly as possible to the most distant palm trees to work just like the others. When these saw the house burning down, they all ran to it and he followed them. He was the last one who arrived, sat down like in shock and shouted: What is all that? Is all our money now lost? — They replied: It is all lost.

¹ from mangedérěder to lead, to control WALL.

² songerêngěr hungry.

³ ródōg fruit.

⁴ gabūl poor.

He said: Well, then we should better separate and each one of us should work for his own profit, because together we are quite unlucky. — They consented.

Later he told his mother: We lost everything here, now I want to go to Ngeaŭr and see this place. Prepare some food for me. — When the food was ready, he started his trip to the south. His first stop was Golungŕs in order to ask for signs to go to Ngivál, but all of them were unlucky. Then Teguliaŭr said: Then divine the following. When I go to Pelíliou and I pay money to all the birds and fish and, most of all the galid spirit in the Gogeál, will Ngivál then be destroyed? — Golungŕs broke a nut and saw that this would happen that way.

When Tegúr left Ngeaŭr, he took a stalk of a ginger plant and the fruit of bel'loi bitter yam, carved money from it, and threw it into the ocean with the following words: Here is your reward ¹, you fish! — In the same fashion he dealt with the birds: Here is your payment, help me to conquer Ngivál! He behaved in this manner until he reached Ngabúkĕd. When he arrived and reached his blai, the Ngivál-people had just taken the roof of his cooking house as a protection against the rain. In addition a large big tree was lying on the beach that Teguliaŭr should bring to Ngivál ². In Ngeaŭr he had changed his money from big pieces into small ones; besides, he also had one piece of money that he had found on the ground ³. First he paid good money to all the galid spirit of Ngabúkĕd, begging them for their help; then he paid so called support-money ulagál a mlai to all the places of Ngarárd and Melekéiok, where a Tĕmakai ruled. All assembled in Melekéiok and he paid one piece of money to each courageous man⁴.

When all this had been accomplished, Tegúr returned to Ngbúkĕd and, together with his men, he drifted the tree down along the coast all the way to Ngivál. There he sat down on the tree trunk in order to challenge the local people. People from Ngivál were very upset and called everyone together with the triton horn shell. Galid spirit Ngirungór ordered them to bring the trunk back and to bring it back here in the right manner, cross wise, as it should have been done for him. Tegur and his men were laughing. They took the tree and threw it on the beach, regardless of the impertinent ones.

Shortly before, Tegúr had sent a messenger to Melekéiok that he expected immediate support. The Ngarárd-people had secretly brought their protōg-clubs. Soon thereafter, the Melekéiok-warriors landed in Kelebís ⁵ at the place of a Imakáng. From there they went up the savannah all the way to the head of the path. Of a Tĕmakai's two sons in Ngarengsasáng one was left-handed and the other one right-handed, therefore, they were called Klasékl and Kladíkm. They came to the wall of stones, stood on it and under their protection they sent the people inside to burn the houses. When the people on the beach saw the smoke, they ran inland. Tegúr's people followed and they also set fire to everything they still found. Both brothers and Tegúr, however, advanced and with the help of their protōg-clubs they beat to death everyone, who crossed their path. All men in the woods were also slain, only the women were spared. Therefore, until recently, Ngivál was well known as klóu mōngolungĕl, the big provider of prostitutes for Melekéiok. In addition, Tegúr gave Tĕmakai a large piece of bágĕl-money and the nglálam rárard as presents and he ate with him in Goláol malk the rooster of Ugélkekláu (story 8). Ngarárd, though, became the oppressor — oukér — of Ngivál for a long time. Soon after the destruction of Ngivál, a boy was born there in the woods; he was called Ngirangĕmĕlás ⁶. He was raised in girl's skirts, in order to deceive Ngarárd.

¹ tiákl

² see story 204 about Ugél regulsiáng.

³ such are called *nglálam rá rar*d

⁴ termelir ar bekéu.

⁵ in Ngardmaŭ Bai Kélebid is situated on the channel, that is probably meant; however, nothing is known about a Imakáng.

⁶ see blai I of Ngarsngaŕ.

When visitors from there slept in Ngivál, they thought he was a girl. However, when the child was old enough, he made spears and hid them in the village and the bush. When Ngira ngĕmĕlás was about 20 years old, fishermen from Ngabúkĕd came to Ngivál to conduct a big metiláp-fishing ¹ expedition to catch mullets. Once they had set up the main net in a circle and when they were ready with their tageier-nets, Ngiranguemĕlás sat for the first time without his apron on a palm tree, to tie gativut-bowls ² to the panicked blossoms, in order to protect them from rats so that these would not disturb the cutting of wine.

When he saw the foreign fishermen gathered in a circle, he pondered, decided to climb down, and rushed into the circle. In each hand he held a shell, in the hole of each one a mullet got stuck. Then, together with his strange catch, he ran away into the bush, so that the fishermen though this must have been a galid spirit. After the fishing trip the fishermen returned home with the intention to soon come back, in order to lure the man once again out of his hiding. At exactly the same spot they discovered fish again and once more set up their net. This time Ngirangĕmĕlás was ready with 10 gativut-shells, all slipped on his right arm. When the fishermen stood once again ready with their tageier-nets, he stormed again into the circle of nets, took one shell after the other and threw each one behind himself, once a mullet had gotten stuck inside; in this manner he behaved with all ten shells. Then he collected them quickly and ran with them into the bush.

After this fishing trip the fishermen went ashore, roasted their fish, and ate them. Inland Ngirangĕmĕlás told this mother, he wanted to go down to them, but she replied: Don't do it, they will kill you! — He, however, said: No. — He took his bundles of spears, hid them besides the stone path, and then, with one spear in each hand, he crawled towards the foreigners, who saw him coming. When he had arrived at the iliud-stone platform, he sat down. They asked him: Where do you belong? — He replied: I belong to this place. I was born here and was raised here. — Then the rubak from Ngarárd called their young people to bind and shackle him. He, however, quickly jumped up, speared two of the chiefs, and ran away in order to fetch the others. He threw them at his pursuers and hit several more. Soon he grabbed his second bundle. Then the Ngarárd-people ran away and, chasing them, he still speared 10 more. The rest of them escaped.

At this time, a child was born in Ngivál, who received the name of Ngiradegĕdegĭl ³. Ngirangĕmĕlás said to his companions: You have to give this child the best food, so it will grow and prosper. Many other children were born at that time (who received the same care). One day, Ngarárd-people landed in a Sims, the landing place of Ngel'lau, and others in a Belód, the landing place of Ngaragĕlūk. In both locations Ngirangĕmĕlás wounded some, so that the strangers went back on board and landed in Golobdáng. The hero, though, first ran inland, then he ran there and once again speared several. Therefore, they started their trip home. They no longer came back and had only their future divined. In the meantime, Ngiradegĕdegĭl grew up. When he was about 18 years old, Ngabúkĕd came to Keklau, in order to fight together against Ngivál. Ngirangĕmĕlás considered the boy too young to fight and told him to stay behind. Once again he alone wounded several of the arrivals, so they retreated again to Keklau. Yet, the following day, they came back. Then the boy could not be held back. — Good, said the older one, but first we want them all to come ashore. — Because he wanted to test him. Ngiradegĕdegĭl first had to urinate, and when Ngirangĕmĕlás shouted: Come, they are all coming! — that one said: Let them, I am not yet finished.

— He was brave, serene, and cautious. He had a bone spur on the outside of his hand, this he used after he had thrown all his spears. When everyone was on shore, he took action and together they killed most of the enemies.

¹ see Fig.9 in Vol. 5.

² half a coconut shell, with a hole.

³ see a Iraŕ

They barbequed the bodies and burned the canoes, so that all of Ngivál reeked of corpses and blood. All their offspring became similarly strong and, therefore, Ngivál was spared further destruction. Only the mongol-delivery to Melekéok is still practiced.

Story 60b. Story Of The True and Wrong Heroes.

log.: bai 151 IVb illustr.

On the right hand side Ngivál, on the left hand side the headland Pkul a Ngēráir, there the people from Keklau, among them a hero Ngirangēmēlās ¹, at the small bathing place of Ngī, on the cape. He was a womanizer, taught the man on his left, Ngirailemasáng, to use fine words, and said to him, “Be brave and courageous, then women will favor you”. When Ngirailemasáng lamented over his weakness, the hero replied in high spirits, “Well, come tomorrow when I am in the bath and throw a spear at my leg, then everyone will say you are brave and courageous”. This really happened Ngirailemasáng placed half a kluk on the tip of the spear and, while throwing it, he shouted: “This is for the medicine”. Then, as agreed, he then ran quickly into the village, so that nobody noticed that he was not followed. When people saw him running, they asked what had happened. He replied, “You have to ask Ngirangēmēlās”. When people later learned that Ngirailemasáng had wounded this one, they admired him and women brought the wall of his house down, in order to see him. In this manner he gained the favor of women. — log.: bai 15 VII^b pl. XIV 18, bai 52 V^b illustr. d.-pl. 9^d.

Story 61. How Ngíra klóultáog Took Revenge When He Became Rich.

Dilēdegú ² was a gaild-spirit woman, who, in the form of a bird, slept in the trees. She had a son Sulógēd, who was born in the strait of Geiúgel ³. When he was grown up, he brought his mother to the village Kloultáog in Ngarárd, he, however, moved to neighboring Ngartúkūr, where he cut palm wine and married a woman. One day, people from Ngardmaū came, raped his wife, and left again. She told everything her husband Sulógēd, who, at once took off to catch up with them. When he came to the place Ngarák l iángēd, the galid spirit-woman a Mlagél stood there and asked him where he was going to. He informed her. Then she said: Let it be, come with me to Ngulítēl ⁴. He agreed and they soon arrived there, just when people were working at the stone path. a Mlagél said: If somebody asks you what you want of the things on the shelf or on the hooks, then do not answer. If, however, somebody asks you if you want what is in the cupboard, then you say yes ⁵. — He did as he was advised and to his great surprise he received a small bag with money. Then, a Mlagél told him: Now return back home. When you come to the head of the trail, and you fall down upon earth, say the following words:

Kiló k moupú, ě rúbang I nearly would have fallen, you rubak!

He did everything precisely as he was told and arrived safely on earth, wandered again to Ngartúkūr and hid his money there. He brought the Ngarióulbai from Ngardmaū there; today the name exists in Ngardmaū only for a landing place. Now Sulógēd lived at ease and the reputation of his wealth spread. One day, Beóŭg from Ngardmaū sent a girl from blai II Ngedengól to him, in order to win him over. She caught up with him on the grassland and enchanted him, so that he returned with her to Ngardmaū and married her. Soon afterwards, he went to Ngartúkūr, put two pieces of galbúgēp-money into his basket and returned. When he arrived in Gurdmaū, two children of the house greeted him, the two boys Goilól and Gongelékl.

¹ see story 60a.

² see story 17a a. 215 “hen”.

³ see story 193 about Tēlámēs and 13 Gorágēl.

⁴ The mountain Ngulítēl, that leads to heaven, therefore, often synonymous for heaven, compare with story 19 about Milad.

⁵ see a similar topic in story 137 about Tur`re Ngeráod.

He gave each of them one galebúgēp with the following words: This is your bird! — Thus, he ended the marriage and went back to Ngartúkūr. There, he constructed with tree trunks a big fishpond, a gongriúr. Everyone had to deliver his catch of fish to the pond. Next to it he planted betel-vines.

When the place was finished, he called himself Urēmákl and started travelling, in order to visit all the rich houses of the archipelago. In a Imül he married again, in fact the daughter of rubak I Sagárimül. As he wanted to continue his trip, he said to his wife, she should stay behind, when he had found a place he would send a canoe to pick her up. Then he sailed south all the way to Peliliou, staying here and there 2—3 days, then up the east coast. Everywhere he did some menial tasks and people took him for a humble man, beating him when he threw fish bones and other refuse behind him against the house, a privilege only for the rich.

From Ngaregolóng he reached again Ngartúkūr and had his wife brought from a Imül to Kloultáog. After some time, he also had Sagárimül and her entire keblīl, family retinue, brought there. On the way they caught some fish, therefore, they arrived at night in their big kabékl-war canoe and numerous smaller canoes. The following morning, they were really surprised, when they saw the channel overgrown by betel-vines and the huge fishpond. The keblīl stayed for a long time and ate everything there was. They were in such high spirits that, whenever they wanted to drink sweetened water, they simply poured the pot of syrup into the creek and then drank from the running water. From Kloultáog they moved to Ngartúkūr, where Urēmákl presented Sagárimul with a lot of money, since he no longer had the intention to marry another, he wanted to pay his wife now. She said, “Do not give me any more money; I want a piece of Ngaretúkūr”. — He replied, “How am I supposed to do that? I cannot remove the land, it is too heavy.” — Then she said: “I mean a name of Ngartúkūr, so that people know that I am married here”. — Thus, he gave her the name Ngartúkūr, which her people took with them; today, the entrance to the channel of a Imül is still called like this.

Yet, he also sent his wife with her money home to her house. He, who had taken the name Ngiraklóultáog, remained alone behind, now started to attack the fishing canoes of Ngardmaū. One day, a man by the name of Medúg, from Ngatpúięg in Ngardmaū sailed to Ngaregolóng. Before his return trip, people warned him of Ngiraklóultáog. He, however, said: “I am not afraid, when he comes out, I will fight him all the way to the bottom of the sea and up to heaven”. Sure enough, both of them met and no one has ever heard from them again; nobody knows where they went, because they have no graves.

Story 62. The Cripple Pelúai And Medúg, The Giant.

log.: bai 16 IV^a d.-pl. 9^e, bai 25 II^a.

Once upon a time, a giant, called Medúg, lived in Kloultáog ¹, a place in Ngarárd. He wandered around the area and whenever he met people fishing, he submerged them and broke their spears. One day, he came to Ngarenggóng, where people were just busy with the kesókēs-catch. He treated them like the others. When they returned home deeply saddened, the cripple Pelúai who lived there said: Unfortunately I was not there, I would have conquered him. — They laughed at him. Once, at another kesókēs-fishing, Pelúai had some young coconuts brought to his canoe. When he met the others out at sea, he asked them: Where is Medúg? — They showed him the giant. He went to him, offered him the nuts to drink, and said: When you come to me during the kesókēs-catch, spare me and let me submerge you, because I am the laughing stock of the village. — Medúg promised to comply with his request and to everyone’s amazement, when the giant came to him, he submerged him underneath the water. When they finished fishing, Medúg called Pelúai over, filled his canoe with fish, and said to him: After tomorrow come again for kesókes.

¹ Others indicate the settlements Ngaretúkūr in Ngardmaū and a Kiok in Ngaregolóng. There, Pelúai is called Mageñtōgut the weak one, while medúg means “strong” (see story 61 end).

Thus, Pelúai rose in people’s estimation and nobody laughed at him anymore. In case someone is unforgiving, people therefore use to say: psa udegúl a Pelúai! give the clever trick of Pelúai!

Story 63. The Squid In The River a Lmet melásǻg In Nagregobatáng¹.

log.: bai 10 VI^a, bai 34 V^a d.-pl. 9^e, bai 87 I, bai 92 e., bai 104 III^b.

Once upon a time, the sun burned a long time very hot on Palau and not a single drop of rain fell. Then, everyone went to the Ngardók-lake, in order to fetch water. The inhabitants of Ngaregobatáng in Ngarárd did the same. One woman there could not walk, therefore, she gave her coconut flask to another one to take with her. This one brought it back filled. Yet, a small octopus, a bukitáng, had unnoticed gotten into it as well. It grew so quickly and squirted water that it overflowed. At first, a wooden vessel was placed underneath, but this one was soon also filled so that the octopus was placed inside. When it grew bigger and bigger, people brought it outside into the courtyard, where a creek was created and then into the riverbed, which he blocked with his arms, so that the woman could direct water from there to her taro-patch and could plant taro. After the woman died, the bukitáng moved into the mangroves and there it gave birth to some young ones. One day, a man from Nggeiangěł saw the female there, he struck it dead, and ate it. Though all, who ate from it, perished. People from Nggeiangěł buried the remains of the animal in Ngaregobatáng, where its grave is still shown today. To this day, during a draught (kemdimt ra ralm), people go to the savannah with a coconut shell filled with a so-called kval delepdep, some scraped young coconut and water. There they pour it out with the words:

bukitáng, ak mlě melai ra ralm l mo ra meséi, ě l ng meditáng.

Octopus, I came to bring of water for the taro patch, because it dry. Then, the water flows from the wrong side back into the taro patch.

Story 64a. The Quarrelsome Crab-Fishers.

log.: bai 34 II^b d.-pl. 9^f, bai 131 VI^a, bai 132 VII^b.

Once upon a time, two men lived in Ngaregobatáng, their names were Ngirablögú and Ngiramöğú (also Mangadmékl and Mangamékl). Together they used to go fishing in one canoe. Then one day, it happened that each one of them wanted to fetch his fish basket first. Since no one was giving in, they had a fierce quarrel, during which Ngirablögú cut the canoe in half in the heat of the argument, so that he could sail alone. However, his part of the canoe sank, so that he had to swim ashore, while the part of Ngiramöğú remained afloat. He could fetch his fish-basket and sail home with it.

Story 64b. The Aphrodisiac of Ngirakerenguáng, log.: bai 9 III^a, bai 10 III^a, bai 21 IV^b, bai 48 II^b d.-pl. 10^a a. pl. III^c, bai 62 III^a illustr., bai 65 V^b, bai 75 VI^b, bai 118 V^b, bi 120 VI^a, bai 136 VII^b, see also A.B. MEYER 81 pl. 3 row 12.

Who had come from Ngarangóis (Galáp) to Ngaregobatáng. He bought it there, because he felt old. He took it home and, during a feast in Galáp, he poured it into an iléngěł-wood container, so that all drank from it and got very excited. Another story reports: One night, Ng. went fishing. Then a certain Mereberéběk ², a blai-crawler and women-groper, came into his blai, fingered his wife, and lay with her. His kirs penis, however, was so big that he hurt the women and she got sick. When Ng. came to know this, he organized a feast, during which he put some aphrodisiac into a bowl, and in this manner he could identify the culprit, because of the size of his kirs.

¹ An attack on the village by Ngivál is known because of the log. in Bai 17 I.

² mereberébek Wall. to grope, to touch.

Story 65. The Superstitious Husband.

log.: bai 61 III^a illustr. d.-pl. 10^b, bai 72 e. pl. VI^a, bai 82 e.

A man called Ngira irisóng from Kekláu went fishing and found a shark, swimming on its back and sticking its belly out of the water. Immediately he thought his wife had betrayed him. He returned home and joined the men’s meeting. Swinging a spear he shouted: Who stole my wife? — One of them stood up out of fear and at once he speared him.

Story 66. The Galid spirit Of The Mountain Ngulítěł.

log.: bai 50 II^a.

On the high mountain Ngulítěł nearby Kekláu lived a galid spirit spirit, who had a lot of money. A man from Ngaregobatáng stole him a fishing net. The galid spirit had wanted to give him money; now he took everything from him. His spirits came in order to kill the culprit, he, however, said: I am poor, tomorrow I will give you two coconuts! At once he filled a basket with nuts and brought it on the Ngulítěł for the galid spirit, who was sitting on a stone table, waiting for him. Afterwards he returned home unharmed.

Story 67. The Captive Curlew Bird In Ngarekerú¹.

log.: bai 44 III d.-pl. 10, bai 72 III^b plate VI^a.

Once upon a time, a curlew bird was fishing on the reef when his leg was caught in a Tridacna shell, which closed on it and held it fast. Therefore, he started to cry frightfully. Soon, another curlew bird flew to a nearby stone and also started to raise its voice. It did not take a long time and a great amount of birds had come to help, but they could not release the prisoner. Then two bai-girls came along and when they saw the trapped bird, they got the fisherman Gobelebál from nearby Kekláu. He freed the bird and gave it to the mongol. They took it home, kept it a few days, and let it fly again.

Story 68. The Lost Son.

A mother gave her son into the house of strangers, who adopted him. One day, when he was growing up, he became very depressed, because he did not know his real mother and he ran away into the forest. Now the mother and the father were looking for him, but could not find him. Thus, they thought he was dead and organized a funeral ceremony. Two men knew where he was and told him about it. Then, he sent a message to his mother that he was alive and returned.

Story 69a. The Unruly Boys,

Who Died In Their Mother’s Body.

log.: bai 69.

A woman and two young boys lived in Kekláu. She was poor and lived on sea cucumbers and crabs. They boys were often fighting each other and the older one always beat the younger six years old one. One day, this one told his mother he wanted to return into her womb. The mother accommodated him, but the older one also followed him and beat him. Then the mother died with her two sons in her body.

Story 69b. The Quarrelsome Women Of a Ulimáng.

(see story 9).

log.: bai I w. pl. II^b, bai 28 VI^a, bai 65 II^a illustr. d.-pl. 10^d, bai 91 V^b, bai 92 e., bai 98 VI, bai 105 V^b pl. XIV 21, bai 138 VI^b pl. XI^a.

Two women lived in Ulimang, in different parts of the village. One had many pineapples, bananas, papayas, etc. Therefore, the other one was rather envious and since she had many rats, she sent these forth to eat the fruits. Now, the first one sent a Yapese to Ngulu to get some cats, which killed off the rats.

¹ compare with story 88a.

This caused both to have a vivid argument on the bridge of the settlement, which ended in fisticuffs, when the owner of the rats started throwing stones. According to another version, god a Ugél lë galid had one wife in heaven and one in Udëuíd. Out of jealousy, the heavenly one sent rats down to earth, while the terrestrial one sent cats to counter them.

Story 69c. The Wild Boar In a Ulimáng.

log.: bai 34 IV^a, bai 65 V^a illustr. d.-pl. 10^e, bai 66 II^a illustr.

Once upon a time, when people from Ulimáng felled a tree in the forest and were about to cut it in order to build the hull of a canoe, a big wild boar attacked them, so that some were badly injured and parts of them were eaten off. They thought it was a galid spirit and ran into the village, where people were immediately very much alarmed, because they thought the enemy was attacking.

Story 70. Catching Flying Fish.

log.: bai 51 V^a illustr. d.-pl. 10^f.

Once upon a time, people did not know flying fish. Yet, one day, during a typhoon, the ocean tossed some of them on the shore of Keklâu. When people wanted to spear them, they flew away. Therefore, canoes now sail outside the reef and catch them there with hooks made from tortoise shell and rekung-crabs as bait. This one is lashed on with bamboo fibers and one of their tails is left sticking out.

Story 71. The Lost Bundle With A Corpse Inside (blsókl).

log.: bai 1 II^b illust d.-pl. 10^f, bai 73 VI^a illustr.

A canoe from Ngivál had picked up a corpse wrapped in mats and was sailing home. When the vehicle was damaged in the twilight, the bundle with the corpse fell over board and drifted away. It ended in the net of the fisherman a Guóng from Ngésáng, who emptied his stone weir at night, at the entrance of which he had put his net. He fingered the bundle and realized that a body was inside. Therefore, he loaded it onto his raft and went home with it, where he buried it. The same story is told of Galáp, where a man had died. A man from Nggeiangël wanted to transport the body to his village. Yet, his canoe capsized and the bundle of mats fell into the channel of Ngabiúl, called Toágël biúl. A local fisherman found it in his net, opened it, and found the corpse, which he buried in Ngabiúl. When the man from Nggeiangël heard about it, he showed his appreciation. In this manner, the family Ngaraingós became closely attached to both places.

Story 72a. Trap Fishing With Only One Sort Of Victuals.

(ómup ě di tĕluó gokurír).

log.: bai11 III^b, bai 22 III^b, bai 23 VIII illustr. d.-pl.11^a, bai 27 VI^a, bai 35 VIII, bai 99 V^b.

One day, two canoes sailed from Ngartúkūr to put down their fish baskets. However, only one had taken provisions along. Now, when the occupant of the other canoe got hungry, he asked for food from the other. The fisherman of this canoe shared brotherly, yet, he could not restrain to say the following:
gokuík mĕngobágĕd¹, ě a lokuím ng díak lobágĕd. My food I cut, but your food you would not have shared. This means: When I am treated badly, I know how to endure it, you, however, would not have done so.

Story 72b. The Kingfisher As Pilot.

log.: bai 8 VI^b illustr. d.-pl. 11^a, (bai 47 VI^a?).

A man from Ngarúkūr drifted during a storm to the west and was the guest of a chief in a foreign land. After some time, when the lost man started to get homesick, his host gave him a kingfisher as a pilot, which guided him safely home.

¹ from omágĕd “to cut”.

Story 73. Ngeül ngartúkūr,

”Ngartúkūr, conquered” by the 7 Debásag.

log.: bai 36 II^b illustr. d.-pl. 11^b.

The rubak of Ngarsióu on Pelíliou were respectable and powerful, as they were related to heaven, from where, in case of need, help should come. One day, they made a klegăđăol, an excursion to visit the village Ngaraklemăđĕl¹ in a Imleĭk. When taking leave from his wife, rubak I said: When blood is flowing from the palm of your hand, then you know that we are dead. —

On the way, the chiefs took a break on Ngurukďápĕl, at the place Mlongúies², nearby Kekerél toi. They rested underneath the overhang of a hollow. The limestone, however, broke off and crushed them all³. At once, blood flowed from the hand of the chief’s wife, who knew now that her husband had perished. She took a taro board and pounded it seven times with the mortar. Within a short period of time the seven Debăsăg⁴, all of them ugly, crippled spirits, came down from heaven; they brought with them the grey rooster Tagáp and his hen.

At once, they came to the woman and asked: What is happening? Who knocked 7 times? — The old woman said: I did it, the rubak are dead. Then the 7 Debăsăg demanded that the woman should send people around Pelíliou and have 7 tet-baskets made for the galid spirit. It did not take long and 6 baskets were brought, but the seventh for the first galid spirit was still missing. Still, the Debăsăg wanted to leave with her baskets, therefore they went to Ngarabeóug⁵, south of Ngariáp where they found a driftwood trunk, on which they sat down. Yet, whatever they did, the raft did not budge and remained where it was. Thus, they came back ashore and asked their leader, who had stayed behind: Why can we not leave? — He replied: I do not know, but my basket is not yet finished.—

Then they moved to Ngariáp, there they forced the man, who was supposed to plait the basket, to finish it. When this was accomplished, all seven moved on to Ngarabeóug. Now the tree trunk sailed away and, therefore, they paddled to the north and landed in Ngaraklemăđĕl. They had scarcely come on shore, when they let the rooster fly, which soon enough flapped its wings and crowed. This caused all inhabitants of the settlement to fall down dead and their houses to crumbled.

Since then, the settlement became desolate and was abandoned. Then the 7 Debăsăg returned to Ngarsióu. a Remesegău, rubak I from Ngaregobatáng next to Keklâu heard about the galid’s spirit’s rooster. One day, a boy had died in his house. The rubak sent his younger brother to Ngartúkūr for a pot of syrup. Yet, in the house, to which he was supposed to go, he only met the wife. He took a pot, already filled with syrup and said to the woman: Tell your husband, I need the syrup for the funeral rites; once these are finished I will bring back the pot and the money. — Then he left. When he reached the halfway resting place Gongĕóng l káep, the man of the house in Ngartukūr caught up with him. He was angry about the abduction of the pot of syrup. He grabbed the pot from behind, which the man from Ngaregobatáng carried on his head, he lifted the vessel in the air, and let it drop on the head of the carrier. The bottom broke and the syrup ran over his body. Then the culprit returned to Ngartúkūr. When Remesegău heard from his brother what had happened, he got very angry and sent a message to Ngarsióu requesting the 7 Debăsăg and their rooster. They came at once to Keklâu, landing in the channel a Iás in the village part Íoul pelú.

¹ See his position in Vol. I illustr. 40.

² the precise position is not clear, it seems not to be far from Teluk a runguiës, this is also mentioned in story 156 about the snake of Ngurukďápĕl.

³ Ngareklemăđĕl must be blamed for the accident.

⁴ from melebăsag, to walk with a limp. They supposedly maimed their feet, when they quickly came down.

⁵ according to story 161 Ngarabeóug is a landing place with a spring nearby Ngardolólók.

They went on to the savannah that was from then on called Ngëdebásăg, after the Debásăg. From here, they started their walk to Ngartukŭr and first they came to the seaside of the mountain Ngulitêl, refreshed themselves there and at that spot they plucked one feather from the rooster and left it lying there. Because of this the place got the name Magáp uliitêl; the western side of the mountain, visited afterwards, got the same name due to the same procedure.

From there, they walked to the savannah of Ngartúkur, called Ketungúiet. There, they plucked the young leaves of the gabóug-Pinang palm, in order to decorate themselves, because a ruk-dance was staged in Ngartúkur. Yet, when they arrived, they released the rooster and the hen and at once the human beings and the houses collapsed; the dancers fell, while dancing, from the stage. Many were dead, many just lost their eyesight ¹. Whatever was still alive, they beat to death with their prótog-clubs.

From this place, they took two ptangg-lean-on stones with them and planted them on the nearby savannah. They placed the rooster and the hen on top of them, which then turned into stone. This is why the savannah got the name Malk. The 7 Debásăg walk from here to a Iméngêl next to Ngardmaŭ, there they built a galdúkl-platform from coral stones, and cut palm wine. Since Ngivál and Ngabúkêd were at that time in conflict with each other they prepared gologódog-spears in order to participate in the fight. In order to harden them, they smoked the sticks of coconut fronds and made the tip of spears from them, which they inserted into a cane. One day, they heard that Ngivál would attack on the following morning, Full of pity, the galid spirit took their spears and walked to hill Tap ra medêi. There, the parties were already engaged in their fight at the a Iveltáng-river ² that interrupts the stone path. They helped the Nagbúkêd-people and killed many of their enemies; only few escaped. From a Iméngêl they sailed again to Ngarsióu, from where they returned back to heaven.

Story 74. Ngirangeáng.

log.: bai 23 IV^a illustr. d.-pl. 11^e, bai 27 VII^a, bai 138 IV^b pl. XI^a.

Ngira ngeáng was a good-looking man from Ngardmaŭ. One day, he sent a messenger to Ngaregobatáng ³ on the east coast in order to tell a woman she should meet with him in Ngartúkŭr. She really came, and both of them found a good place called Ngaragódêl for a hut in the bush. He brought a basket full of taro and they both ate there together in the woods, which was considered bad manners. In the evening they separated again. Ngirangeáng had a better hut built in the same place and went fishing in the meantime. In the evening he had himself brought by canoe to Ngartúkŭr, looked at the workers, and, when the house was finished, took 3 l dúkl-fish, went inside, and placed them on the gorángêl-bamboo grating and waited for the woman. She came when it got dark. She stepped into the house and when she saw the fish, she said surprised: Is this a feast or an affair?

Ngikal Ngirangeáng
ri rengedí ⁴ gorangelêl a klsau
ma ki boro Ngartúkŭr
ě ngi a mla mo meng melúl a kldêl ‘l dukl l kêlám ⁵
ě ki tureká ma ng kmu:
a Ipelaŭ ⁶ kom galid ra rael

This Ngirangeáng,
he tied them, the grating for the lover
and we go to Ngartúkŭr, yes, he went ahead to roast
the three ldukl-trigger fish, our food.
We go inside and he says:
a Ipelaŭ you come all this way!

¹ mangáp to make somebody blind with the help of the rooster tagáp.

² see the a Iveltáng-river.

³ about this place see also story 91, 73, etc.

⁴ merengêd to tie.

⁵ kal food.

⁶ the women of Ngaregobatáng are called a Ipelaŭ; kom galid r tial sils “you endure the sun”; she sacrificed herself.

Ngirangeáng probably went on to a Ulimáng, which is close to Ngaregobatáng; this verse deals with it:

ngikal Ngirangeáng	This Ngirangeáng
ra lo ba dalál a kluk ¹	brought a large kluk
le me ra Ulimara Ubai re kemám	and came to Ulimáng, to a Ubai, to us
ě ki tilegal ² ba táiu	and we washed ourselves with scraped coconut kernel,
ě ki tuangêl ³ meaŭ	and we enter blessed,
ma klebêkó ⁴ dimlêk a lebó madrir a lángêl .	and the club did not cease to cry.

Story 75. The Fiend From Ilêtemú (delép ra Ilêtemu).

log.: bai9 II^a illustr. d.-pl. 11^d, bai 14 VI^a, bai 21, bai 37 II^b illustr. d.-pl. 11^e, bai 85 V^b.

A demon, in the form of a gólik, a bat, lived between Gólei and Ngardmaŭ in the cave called Ilêtemú. He attacked and killed people from Ngardmaŭ when they were on their way to way to Gólei. In the end the people from Ngardmaŭ moved to Gólei and only one old woman remained. She gave birth to two sons, Rusbedengél and Gareálbedengél, “Sting-Ray- and Shark-Tooth-Skin”. After they had grown up, both of them decided to kill the gólik. They built a house from the ridge of which sharply pointed spears stuck out. When it was finished, they lit a fire inside, whose smoke seeped through the roof upwards. The animal quickly noticed that somebody lived in the house and lunged at it in order to break it and to kill its occupants. Yet, Golik speared itself on the pointed rafters and perished.

When it was dead, they cut it open, removed its bladder and placed it on a toluk-bench, in order to let it drift to Gólei. At the same time, they spoke to it: When you come to Golei and people do not know who you are, remain just as you are now; yet, when they suspect that you come from delép ra Ilêtemú, then you will swell in size. — Whereupon the bench drifted northward. When it reached Gólei, Ngardmaŭ -people were just fishing with their deraŭ -nets. They saw the bladder and debated where it came from, until one of them said: It must be from delép ra Ilêtemú! — Then it swelled and people knew that Golik was dead and they returned to Ngardmaŭ. However, when they wanted to enter the channel, they found it blocked. The two boys had done this on the order of their mother, who had been so miserably abandoned. They threatened to kill the arrivals, if they should try to enter by force. Then the Ngardmaŭ -people promised the two boys the following:

Whenever you see a coconut-shell with palm-wine hanging somewhere, you are allowed to take it;
whenever you see firewood lying in a house, you can take it;
whenever you see a big piece of taro in a basket, you can take it;
finally you are allowed to wear dugong bracelets and can wed two women.

—Then both of them relented and allowed the emigrants to move in again. Today, the offered privileges still belong to blai VII a Ikêám in Ngêrutói.

Story 76. How Ngiragosisáng Took Revenge On His Wife.

log.: bai15 VIII, bai 16 V^b, bai 18 II^b, bai 22 VII^b illustr. d.-pl. 11^e, bai 38 IV^a, bai 48 n. pl. II^e, bai 64 III, bai 65 VII^b, bai 83 II^a, bai 84 II^a, bai 94 VI^b, bai 99 II^b, bai 106 V^a, bai 120 V^b, bai 125 III^b, bai 129 IV^b, bai 140 II^b (pl. XII^b).

¹ a piece of money; actually “his mother of the kluk”; it is also called rekómêl kluk “broken kluk”

² mesileg to wash; táiu

³ tuangêl actually “door”.

⁴ klebêkól club, society; mad actually to die; to cry lmángêl.

Ngiragosisáng from Kekláu had a wife in Ngardmau and a bai-girl in a Nglabáng in a Imeúngs, of whom the first one had no idea. One evening, when she discovered this, she refused to have connubial intercourse. He decided to take revenge. On the following morning, he invited his wife and her family to a big feast. When everyone had assembled at the stone pier of a Itebáng to welcome Ngiragosisáng’s canoes loaded with food coming from Nggeiangêl, a goiláol-dancing stage arrived, but, in front of the eyes of his wife, he sailed on with the food to a Nglabáng, in order to present it to his lover.

	The chant:
găbŭl a Diragosisáng mangîl a di klsul	Poor woman Gosisáng, you are waiting for the liar,
a ngi a íong golegêtelél	he has passed by with his raft;
mal du ma kulkemetâu ra mur	you really longed for the feast food;
e mora Mlungúi ra Nglabáng	on the way to Ngaramlungúi, to a Nglabang.
rengûl Gosisál marát tal moáis e ngi.	The heart of Gosisáng was sad, but only for one night.

Story. 77. How Ngirakorángës Helped Melêlêm’s Wife.

log.: bai 9 VIII illustr. d.-pl. 11^f, bai 133 VII^b illustr.

Melêlêm from Ngêsêbei next to Ngardmau cut off a tree to build a canoe. He asked Ngirakorángës from Ngivál to be his carpenter, who came at once. One day, Melêlêm went fishing and, when taking leave, he said to his wife to take good care of Ngirakorángës. This she did. In the evening, when she brought him food, he approached her. She, however, said this was not all right. Then he fervently desired to see her private parts and she complied; but there was nothing. Then he took a gadalëngóbêl-shell, broke it, and cut the woman. Then everything was in order. When Melêlêm came home, he said to Ngirakorángës he should sleep in the blai, as he would stay in the bai. Although Ngirakorángës wanted to change his mind, he did not succeed. Then the woman told her husband what had happened. This made Melêlêm change his mind and he slept together with his wife in the blai. When the construction of the canoe was finished, Melêlêm sang while it was pulled down:

ngikal Ngirakrángës, a malamált a gesengél lagád

That Ngirakranges, it is just the mark of a man, ng mëgesengí a káep, ng remûl a pelú mẽ kesekiúng

he marks it, the sailing canoe, he makes room, where we want to live, ě tometí ¹ a despedêlél ² and prepares her eastern side!

Story 78. Gárbêdul’s Inheritance In Ngardmau.

log.: bai 2 III^a illustr. d.-pl. 12^a.

When rubak I, Gárbêdul from Ngêrutói in Ngardmau, was lying in his grave, the rubak of the settlement gathered on the iliud-stone rectangle and sent a message to his family, requesting the money of the deceased. His wife actually had it, but his younger brother was supposed to get it. Yet, he was in Ngeráod, and did not know about this death. Only after he heard about it, did he come to Ngêrutoi and the Ngaragoldiáng council requested it in his name, took it away from the wife, and gave it to him. Now, he also went to get the money he had received from the deceased beforehand and which he had buried; now he was a rich man.

¹ from melámet to make straight.

² despadál 'l the eastern side, here the main side of a woman.

Story 79a. Ngabúked’s Bai-Girls In Ngardmau.

log.: bai 24 VII^b.

Once upon a time, a blolóbol-excursion of bai-girls came from Ngabúkêd to Ngardmau. The girls were in the bai, where the rubak received them. One of the men came repeatedly to the bai in order to sleep with them, but they refused. Soon thereafter, they came down to the beach in order to sail to Ngabúkêd, but they had no canoe. The man in question was just there with his raft. They said: Give us your raft! — He replied: Yes, if each girl takes her turn and first sails out at sea with me and lets me have my way with her. — All agreed to do so and so they came back home.

Story 79b. Gólik e klél.

log.: bai 128 II^b.

A man in Ngabúkêd had died and his female relatives were looking for syrup for the funeral. One of the relatives in Ngardmau sent her husband to Ngabúkêd, but he did not get any syrup, which angered her very much. “Whoever brings me a pot shall be my husband”, she shouted in her anger. When her husband claimed his conjugal rights, she said, “You want to be my husband and do not even bring me syrup?” When Golikeklél heard this, he bought 3 pots for the woman, who soon afterwards moved into his house.

Story 80a. The Poor Mad ra klaî And The Wealthy Sesilîl ¹.

log.: bai 28^{br}illustr. d.-pl. 12^a, bai 50 n., bai 67 II^b illustr. d.-pl. 12^b, bai 106 VII^a, bai 151 VI^a, about Sesilîl: bai 19 III^a, ai 90 II^b.

A woman from Ngarepkeî in Ngarárd lived in Ngardmau, where she had a relationship with Mad ra klaî. One evening, when darkness had set in, Mad went to the bai where the woman lived and threw a rebótêl-fruit, a wax apple, into the house as a signal for her. However, the fruit hit the woman’s navel in such an unlucky way that she died the same night. She was buried in Ngardmau. When news of her death reached Ngarepkeî, people there soon decided to pass them on to the children of a Guáp ². As soon as they heard about it, they started a gomeús-excursion to Ngarepkeî in their war canoe. There they all met, in order to march together to Ngardmau. When rubak I Beóug heard about the war party, he said: Let Mad ra klaî pay for this with his own head. — This one found out about it and complained that people were turning him in ³ just because he was poor and unimportant. However, he had found a piece of móngongâu-orange money piece in the channel Ngarióulbai, and he had given it the name of the place where he had found it. He put it around his neck and, armed with his spear, he went in a crouching oráel-fighting fashion to meet the enemy; challenging him he sang:

a loi ⁴ kongě ⁵ Góbakremegú

e a Tugěremél diak lěkó ⁶

ngalekél a gěbŭl l mesóbil

meng di oiet a mlîl ⁷ Pělau

l mei ra Gurdmau

He sat down thinking one would have been enough to punish him, then he got up again and continued:

a loi kongě Sgárainmŭl

e á Regěiúngěl ng diak lěkó ngíka

ngalekél a mesóbil dil.

If you do not want to have it, Gobakremegú (Ngarsúl)

Tugeremél (Ngurusár) had to know that I am the child of a poor widow.

However, they pulled their Palauan canoe into the water and sailed to Gurdmau.

If you did not want to have it, Sagárainmŭl (a Imŭl),

Regěiúngěl (Ngarmíd) has to know, this one,

That I am a child of the widow.

Sagárainmûl and Góbakremegú sat in the entrance of a house. Madraklaĩ went there placing his head on the doorsill so that they could loosen the string. They took his piece of money and went back to Ngarepkēĩ. There, they discussed who should own the money. Both chiefs thought Regeiúngĕl should take it, yet this one did not want to, because of the vicinity of Goréðr. Also Tuguremél from Ngurusár was afraid, because of a Iraĩ, and Sagárainmûl feared the rubak of Ngarekeāĩ. Finally Góbakremegú — in those days a woman holding both the male and female title — took the mongongaũ-piece, because Ngarsúl was independent.

As her son Sesilil wanted at that time to marry to a Imûl, he took the piece of money to Kmálk in Ngatpang in order to change it there. Yet, because he only had a vague idea of its value, it caused him a lot of troubles. Once he had received the small change, he took it to the grassland of Kmálk, suspending it from the branch of a títímĕl-tree, in order to check its weight. He found it too light and therefore returned it and asking for more, until it was even. Then he brought the changed money to his mother, who was satisfied with the exchange and told him to go to a Imûl, in order to organize a mur-feast for his wife.

Yet, Sesilil was soon poor again, because he was lazy, only traveling around for his pleasure ¹, at most he occasionally caught some fish for himself and his mother. Then one day, he went to Golungĭs on Ngeaur, in order to learn, with the help amangalil-divination, how to get rich. When he got the question that people should live for fun, then wealth would come, the sign hit. Thus, he returned to Ngarsúl. Soon animosity broke out between his place and Ngarevikl. All warriors went by canoe to the north. Sesilil, though, slowly finished his bamboo spear, then he hiked across the savannah to Ngarevikl. Yet, when he arrived, the place was already taken. He followed the river valley and met an old woman carrying a basket on her head. He pointed the spear at her, but she said: Wait, I am holding all of Ngarevikl in my hand. — She took the basket down and opened it. Then he saw that it was filled with money. He said: Good, my old mother, you gave me Ngarevikl, you shall be my mother. Go ahead I will protect you. — However, when she walked ahead, he speared her from behind, took the basket, and ran to Ngarsúl. People thought this good-for-nothing had only worthless stuff in his basket and so he crossed the village unhindered. He carried the money home and hid it.

One day, his club decided each of its members had to have a dugong-bracelet. Nr. I went to Sagárainmûl and told him about his idea, but the money he offered was not good enough for the rubak. The same happened to member nr. II. Then Sesilil said, let me buy the bracelet for myself. — Good, said the others and laughed. Sesilil, though, went to Sagárainmûl and paid him 2 galebúĝep and 1 kldáit and received the vertebra, which he put on his arm. Suddenly, people knew that Sesilil was wealthy, but they did not know how he had become so rich. Soon afterwards, he obtained the name Godíu re ngós, “the one who sneezes² to the east”, because being a rich man he took the privileged to sneeze loudly.

Story 80b. Kmai ra Gamúl.

log.: bai 62 VI^b illustr. d.-pl. 12^c, bai 103 VII^a, Bai 117 w.

When assembled for state affairs, the rubak of Ngardmaũ ask this crab for advice concerning the value of big pieces of money. No details of this story are known.

Story 81. The Good-Natured Gululāu.

A chief called Gululāu lived in a Dims (see Vol. 2, on the map a Sims seems to be situated more to the south). He was a good-natured man who knew a lot and could do much. Yet, close by in Ngēráir lived a man, who was feared and shunned because of his sternness and rudeness. This one came to Gululāu, who was so indulgent to trust him with everything. This encouraged other people to also go to Gululāu and his fame spread.

¹ therefore he seems to be called Ngiramelil.

² see chant 241.

Story 82a. Golél a uláol “The Patched Floor” ¹.

log.: bai 94 VII^a, bai 95 VI^a.

In Ngēráir, a woman had given birth in the house of her father Mangagúp; her husband was present at the same time. Then the father said to his son-in-law: We sleep together in this part of the house, my daughter will sleep on the other side. — So it happened. Yet, during the night the man crawled over to his wife, who received him badly and wrecked the floor of the house. The following morning, the old man said to the husband: You pay a piece of money to mend the floor then all will be well. After the money had been paid, the floor came back together on its own. Therefore, even today the payment to restore a marriage is called golél a uláol.

Story 82b. The Story Of The Beautiful Měang.

log.: bai 48 s., bai 59 VII^a illustr. d.-pl. 12^c.

A beautiful girl called Měang lived together with her brother Ngiraietókl in Ngēráir, a village that formerly belonged to Ngivál. One day, a man by the name of Gólukl came from Ngadvád nearby Ngarsúl and asked for Měang’s hand. Her brother consented under the condition that the fiancé would not touch the girl, until he, the brother, would allow to do so. Gólukl promised, yet he did not keep his word. Inflamed by his desire, he surprised the girl in her sleep, after he had entered the house forcefully, which collapsed under the couple’s weight. When Gókul’s misdeed had become evident in this manner, people from Ngēráir came to attack the culprit. Yet, Ngiraietókl, the brother of Měang said to Gólukl: Give me a big piece of money, then the house will be restored. This one agreed and handing over the piece of money he was forgiven and in addition obtained Měang as his wife. —

Story 82c. The Galid Spirit-Woman Bitatúl² And Her Child.

log.: bai 75 III^b illustr.d.-pl.12^f.

One day, a woman found a child underneath the roof of her house, blai Goperdóng, in Ngivál. She kept it and observed a female monster coming at night in order to breast feed the child. When the child was 6 years old, the mother no longer came and it became so wild and unruly that the women of the house brought it into the forest, where the galid-spirit woman Bitatúl found it again and kept it with her.

Story 83. The Premna-Tree As A Small Shrine

(gosm lĕ galsbóng). log.: bai 35 III illustr. d.-pl.13a.

A gosm- Premna tree stood in the village Ngēráir, which belongs to Ngivál. One day, a man cut it down in order to build a small galsbóng-shrine for his galid spirit. However, when he wanted to work the wood he could not do so. This angered the galid spirit and he sent him out to sea to fish for shark. In the evening, the man returned with nothing, while the village people had caught in the meantime a lot of gúdog-emperor fish in an inland lake. He tried this the following day, while the others went to catch shark and the outcome was the same; he caught nothing and the others had a good catch. On the third day, he wanted to go out at sea again. He sailed away in his canoe, but the galid spirit held on to the tack of the sail when he was about to tack the canoe. Only when the man entreated him, the god let him sail away. Once again he returned empty-handed, but now he made a good galsbóng, which led to better results, once he went fishing again.

Story 84a. Regósög’s House In Ngarebõkú.

log.: bai 24 VI^a, bai 48 I illustr. d.-pl. 13^b, bai 82 II^b.

Regósög, rubak I of Ngarebõkú in NgatĕIngál was very rich. One day, he said to a Rdĕĝór, rubak I from the Island Nggeiangĕl: Bring me some fish every day; I will pay you.

¹ This story is probably the same as the one of the beautiful Měang (82b).

² one “side” (bitang) = “breast”, thus “one-breasted”, see story 57 a. 137.

— a Rdegór followed the request and brought everything he caught, yet, the food was not enough, so that a Regósöğ was soon suffering from lack of food. Then a Rdegór asked: Why don’t you have any more food? Does this house not have any eyes? — a Regósöğ did not know what he meant; he could not guess the meaning of the words. Thus, a Rdëgór went to his place and fetched his brother. When once again nothing was in the house of a Regósöğ, a Rdëgór sent him into the cooking house, where he shouted at once: Here are many dishes! — See, a Rdëgór added, this is the eye of my house. He is always at home and knows everything. This house has two shells and two kinds of wealth and it is the house of a Regósöğ, but this canoe that sails, belongs to a Rdëgór.

Story 84b. Regósöğ In Nggeiangël.

log.: bai 65 III^a.

Once upon a time, a Regósöğ was visiting a Rdëgór in Nggeiangel, to whose wife a Dirangardókou he offered some water with a sngórökrail in it, whereupon a Rdëgór offered the wife of a Regósöğ some water with a needlefish*hdepedepë segaláng* in it. Both women drank the offered drinks. When Regósöğ wanted to leave his hosts, a Rdëgór and wife, did not allow it, until everything was again in order. Then the women took some medicine, made from the milk of the ěás-tree, whereupon the animals came out.

Story 85a. The Lame Cripple Kúei In The Basket.

log.: bai 8 II^a illustr., bai 15 V^b illustr., bai 23 V^a illustr. d.-pl. 13^a, bai 140 VI^b.

Kúei of Ngatmel lived with a woman in Ngarebökú ¹; he was totally covered with wounds, especially on the arms and legs, and because of this, he crawled around on all fours. The sores were so deep, that he could place money inside. One day, his wife took him in a basket to Blissang and left him there in the house of rubak Ngiraurák, who took him in. One day, a Ilāi, his brother in Ngatmél had gone fishing and had caught a dugong in his net. Buk, Rubak IV of Nggësár, had also gone fishing at full moon and had found a Ilāi, when he had just caught the mesekíu sea cow. He wanted to have it for himself, and this started a fight between the two. Around the same time, Kúei sailed over from the west coast and met both of them. He said: Don’t quarrel, take a net and work together. They did so and were both satisfied. Kúei’s chant, when he arrived in the basket at the channel of Blissang and heard the canoe-builders sneer:

ië re mel’lóbog ě toungepáet ²	the hollow out (their canoes) and talk nasty,
akluál ³ ra táog	I should fish for crabs in the channel;
di kamko ng marāu	they do not know he is rich,
luba Gomiótël ma Psés ⁴ l ngara geimál	that Gomiótël and Pses are with him in his arm;
ritertegú ⁵ mem bágël.	has he broken it, a bágël money piece comes out of it

Story 85b. The Ugly Telitëgīngai (Dedīngingai).

log.: bai 65 IV^b illustr. d.-pl. 13^c.

Telitëgīngai of Ngarebökú was very sick and ugly, he was an albino. Therefore, he only slept at nighttime with a woman and was never seen during the day. Yet one morning, he woke too late. Although he took at once two mats to cover himself, the shocked woman started screaming and he fled. But he was nearly beaten to death by the aroused neighbors.

Story 86a. Ngarebökú’s Destruction.

Once upon a time, the village Ngarebökú, which is now deserted, enslaved Ngaregëlūk, which also belonged to Ngivál. When fishermen of the first place were caught in the rain, they went to Ngaregëlūk and took the roofs off the houses in order to used them as umbrellas. After using them, they threw them away on the mountain of Ngarebökú. The oppressed people became embittered because of this. Yet, in those days, Ngarebökú was a large village. Therefore, offering some money people from Ngaregëlūk recruited partners. Once they had secured their help, they attacked their oppressors and destroyed the place.

Story 86b. Meregórög bökü

(see Vol. 2, p. 120, footnote 1).

log.: bai 7 I, bai 11 IV^a, bai 20 V^a, bai 52 gk. I. illustr. d.-pl. 13^b, bai 91 IV^b, bai 97 III^a, bai 98 III^a, bai 126 IV^b, bai 130 II^a, bai 136 I, bai 143 V^b, bai 146 IV^b, bai 148 IV^a.

A Woman lived in Ngarebökú, according to some other information it was a man, who stole everything he could lay his hands on, taro-benches, bowls, fish, taro, etc., etc. Therefore, in the memory of the Palauans he is depicted as a figure with long arms and fingers.

Story 87. How Lake Ngardók Was Created.

log.: bai 32 II^b illustr.

In the old days, Lake Ngardók was a taro patch. Why it became a lake? This is what happened: Once upon a time, a woman from Blissang went everyday to the taro patch Ngardók with her two daughters. The old woman warned both of them never to turn around on their way home, as otherwise a flood would come. — One day, when they were on their way home, they met two men, who said: This is a beautiful taro patch. — Then the two girls turned around and looked back, at once a flood descended and flooded the plantation. Only a small patch remained on the northern end of the lake, the Ptil I ngardók.

Story 88a. Rebábäg of Blissang And The Grateful Birds

(ómak a garmél).

log.: bai 14 II^b, bai 21 VIII illustr. d.-pl. 13^c, bai 25 III^a, bai 27 IV^b, ai 31 IV^b illustr. d.-pl. 13^c, bai 50 II^b illustr. d.-pl. 13^c, bai 75 VIII, bai 94 VII^b illustr., bai 95 II^a, bai 118 br., bai 119 VI^a, bai 128 I, bai 152 II^a illustr.

The big sea bird terátër lived on a bird’s-nest-fern delimës in the mangroves of Ngarebökú, a place in Ngivál. There it was brooding and had many young ones. One day, all the young ones went fishing, the youngest one wanted to come along and, as it still was clumsy, they set it on a stone so that it could watch. Yet, his siblings forgot about him and, when the water was rising, he drifted away to the head of the path in Blissang, which is called Ngareklím. Rebábäg, the rubak from there, found him and constructed a cage, where he raised him lovingly. When the mother-bird missed her youngest one, she became very angry about the thoughtlessness of its siblings and she sent them into all directions looking for it. One of the searchers had the misfortune in Ngarekerú to step into an open ukél-shell, which closed at once so that the bird was caught ¹. However, the fresh water eel mardingáol ² came to help it; with the help of its sharp tail it cut the internal muscle at the lock-part of the shell, so that the bird regained its freedom. Finally the siblings found their youngest one in Rebábäg’s house in Blissang. They reported this to their mother and also that he was doing well there. Thus, the old one said: Well, let him stay there, but whenever you are fishing, remember your brother. —

¹ other people say he was in Ngarameskáng and was called Madál a blai. Maybe these are two stories, which were united here.

² oungepáet to clap.

³ kuál a net for crab fishing, used by old people and children.

⁴ akubáng I have it; G. a. P. are names for pieces of money, which he carried in the crook of the arm, respectively the cavities of his sores, a goldóiöğ and a móngongau.

⁵ meritég to brake; bágël a big piece of money.

¹ compare with story 67.

² according to another information the needlefish depédës galáng made the shell laugh so that it opened, and thebcoromorant bird deróiöğ escaped (see story 188a).

So, every evening after fishing, they flew to Rebábăg’s house, each one of them with a fish in its beak, which they dropped there. This went on for a long time and Rebábăg always had a lot of fish to eat. However, when people in the village heard about it, he was ashamed that he always ate everything himself, and therefore, he organized a mur-feast for his village. The grateful birds brought him so many fish for the feast that everyone in the large settlement had plenty to eat.

Story 88b. The Two Blind Ones From Blissang.

log.: bai 28 VIIIillustr. d.-pl. 13^e.

A completely blind man went fishing with a one-eyed man, who had tied the canoe to an anchoring pole. Then he went fishing and left his blind companion on board of the canoe. While he fished with a handheld net, a delangarak-animal struck his good eye so that he also became blind. Now both fishermen were blind and had to patiently wait to be saved. After they had waited a long time in vain, a crazy man called Didrôî sailed from Blissang to get them. However, clumsy as he was, he got stuck in the mangroves and both of them had stay overnight at sea and were only rescued the following day.

Story 88c. The Dissatisfied Mongol from Blissang.

log.: bai 72 II^a illustr. d.-pl. 13^f.

Four mongol sat on the stone bridge of Blissang and watched their caretaker, who tried every day to catch mullets with a ikûrs-hand held nets, yet they always jumped and escaped. In the meantime, people from Ngêbûrêġ fished not far away in the right manner with the sap-net and derâu-hand held-nets. The girls clapped their hand, whenever they saw the fish jump. When one of the Blissang-men approached his mongol, she insulted him and went over to the people of Ngêbûrêġ.

Story 88d. The Unfriendly Blissang-People.

log.: bai 102 IV^b.

On the heights in the vicinity of Blissang, some non-local canoe-builders shaped the hull of a canoe. When it was finished, they asked the people of Blissang for help and they pulled the canoe down. Once they arrived down below, the foreigners said: Blissang is like an ocean! The Blissang-people, however, did not understand the meaning and took offense, although it was well meant. They pulled the canoe back up the mountain.

Story 89. The Moray Eel of Blissang.

(Kesebôkú ra Blissang)

log.: bai 23 VI^b, bai 95 IV^a, bai 152 IV^a illustr.

Once upon a time, the now extinct village Blissang consisted of two parts, Ngêdîp and Ngamongóng. The place was heavily populated and, therefore, had little food. Often its residents had to look for food in the bush. One day, the women came to the place Ngarebôkú, looking for food and met there a huge moray eel. Its body was hidden in the brushwood, but its head was lying on the path. The Kesebokú asked: Where are you going? They replied: We are looking for food in the bush. He said: Couldn’t you louse me a bit? They replied: No, we have no time. The women from Ngamongóng went ahead, the ones from Ngêdîp followed. The eel also asked the latter ones, but he got the same answer. Only the last woman of the group, the daughter of Diraurák answered his question: Wait a bit, I will quickly look for food and then I will come. Then the Kesebôkú said: Leave it, you shall have everything from me. Thus, she loused him at once, and when she had finished and wanted to leave, he called: First you should eat something! He shook himself and fish, taro, etc. came out. She was very surprised and ate. When she had finished eating, he continued: I think you are afraid of me. Go and look for my son, so you can see that I am a human being. He showed her the way she had to go and as soon as she had left, a man slipped out of the eel skin and hurried to the designated place. When the woman saw the man there, she immediately found him handsome, and at once was gripped by love. She spoke with him and returned to the place where the Kesebôkú was lying.

The young man had also returned there and had slipped back into the skin of the eel. He asked: Did you see him? She replied: Yes, he looked splendid. Then the eel shook himself again and a lot more food came out of him, wild yams bel’lôî and geibárs, fig-fruits of gosékêđ, uôsöğ, gerságêl and many more trees. Everything, he cried, belongs to you. You shall not to have to go into the bush anymore, but you can await your female friends here. But, she asked him, how am I supposed to carry all this? He said: Don’t worry, when you come home, the food will be there already, it will run on its own there. When the women returned from the bush with their baskets filled with bad food, they scolded the one who had remained behind and they shouted: She only ate a little bit here from Kesebôkú, now she has nothing, and what shall her parents do?

She said nothing and walked home behind them. Yet, when she arrived at home she found the room filled with food and all sorts of delicacies. The parents were sitting there in amazement. The mother asked her daughter how all this had happened and now this one reported what had occurred. Then the old woman said: Good, you just go back there tomorrow! She gave of their abundance to all the houses in Ngêdîp. They enjoyed it very much and ate as much as they could. On the following day, the daughter went again alone to Kesebokú. When leaving, the mother had told her: If it is friendly, tell it, you want to marry his son.

The girl looked lovely. When she reached the eel, she said: I come again for food and I want to delouse you. But how shall it be? Do you want to become my uncle or my husband? He replied: Very well, my girl. The reason I talked to you is, that I wanted to marry you. Later on, in the afternoon, he said: Return alone to your village, your food is coming. Tomorrow night, we want to get together. So it happened. The following evening Kesebôkú went with the girl. On the way she asked him: Where is your son, why does he not come with us?

He answered: Let it be, he is waiting for me. When both of them were close to the village, he sent her ahead with the message that both of them wanted to go to into the shrine and not into the house. Good, the mother said. Then the daughter went ahead into the small ulangáng-spirit house. Soon afterwards Kesebôkú came, rolled itself into a coil underneath the floor, and turned into a young man, who then stepped into the small house. She was frightened and said: You deceived me, I thought you were an eel and not a man. Yet, you are a human being and I like you!

After they had lived there for a while, he wanted to give a mur-feast for her. She told her parents, who consented. They build a diangêl-dance-stage, where the dance was taking place. Then they sent a message to Ngamongóng that people should come to eat all the dishes. They really came and performed a galitûk-dance on the ground:

ked mo melngót l pekl dîl	We went to collect each woman
ě kau a túngetni Ngörót	you, though, found Ngorót ¹ .
ng tőkói l’lúseg re kâu	this is the reason for your happiness,
ě tőkói l kერიór rangák.	but the reason of our distress.

After the feast was over, the young man paid all debts — because his skin hid a lot of money — and left his remaining money in the house of Diraurák. Then he said to the daughter: I cannot stay much longer with you, because I am naked and have to die soon. Everything has been fulfilled for you and for me. When I die, tell people to bury me at the place where you found me. Then, when I start growing in form of a kesebôkú-vine, I will not harm you. But, when he died, people did not do as they were ordered, and they buried him outside of Ngamongóng, and the vine overgrew the place so that it perished.

¹ the money donating island, see story 9.

Story 90. How The Rats Claimed The ríamēl-Fruits.

Once upon a time, a riamēl-football tree stood in Ngēbūrēg. When one of its big fruits fell down, the rats ate it. One day, a boy wanted to have a fruit from there. His father gave him one. Yet at night, the rats chewed the eyes out of the boy’s sockets, so that he died. Then the father cut down the tree.

Story 91. The Story Of The Fruit Bat Gólik reidáp buruógēl.

log.: bai 7 III^b, bai 13 V^a, bai 48 n., bai 95 VII, bai 125 II^a, bai 152 VIII illustr.

Once upon a time, there was a gigantic animal, which lived since ancient times in Pelau. A woman, called Gobagád, lived in Ngēbūrēg next to Melekéiok, in blai II Ngēruruíkl. She had a small girl, who cried a lot. One day, she angrily went in front of the house while rocking the child in her arms. When it did not want to stop crying, the old woman shouted: Gólik, pick up the child! — Suddenly the sky darkened, an enormous Gólik appeared, snapped the child from its mother’s arms, and carried it away. It deposited the child on a tall tree and took care of it. Thus, the child grew into a lovely young woman, for whom it stole everything it could get a hold of. One day, it said to her: One day, if you see blood streaming from your hand, then you will know that I am dead. Then take everything I have brought you and bring it to your family, who is in Ngēbūrēg. — In the course of its thieving, the big and heavy Gólik destroyed many houses, because it dropped on them, so that they collapsed under its weight. This finally caused its death, because people in Ngeaur stuck sharp bamboo poles into the ridges of their roofs, on which the monster impaled itself. When the girl realized by the blood on her hand that her foster father was dead, she descended from the tree and arrived in Ngaregobatáng (nearby Keklāu), where she met a canoe from Ngarsúl, which brought her to her place. There, she became a wealthy and high-ranking woman.

Story 92a. Gosuláp And The Exhibitionistic Sikiáng.

log.: bai 25 VII^a illustr. d.-pl. 14^a, bai 117 VII^b.

Once upon a time, the man Gosuláp from Melekéiok went with the mongol Sikiáng into the forest of Nivál. The girl soon got tired, reclined on a bed of leaves (ngáus), lifted her apron, and spread her legs. When he saw her vuk vagina, he shouted: Are you a human being, why don’t you talk? — When he repeated his words, the girl got angry and reproached him for his stupidity. Then he told her to be quiet, took his basket and his adze, positioned himself and shouted, “Talk to me! When I am dancing, you should speak”! — Then he danced. But, when there was still no answer, he said, “Should I sing? Why don’t you talk?” — And he started singing loudly, but without any results. Then he started to cry and whined: “You do have a nose, mouth and hair, you must be a human being. Thus, talk to me!” — The mongol got very angry and left.

Story 92b. The Abuse Of Goats.

log.: bai 66 IV^b illustr. d.-pl. 14^b, bai 72 pl. IV^a pl. VII^a, bai 85 I, bai 92 e.

When goats were introduced into Palau, it happened that horny men abused them. In 1910, one of the culprits supposedly still lived in Melekéiok.

Story 93. The Discovery Of The Triton’s Horn.

log.: bai 60 III^b illustr. d.-pl. 14^e.

Once upon a time, the galid spirit a Guódēl ¹ walked together with other spirits at the pier nearby Cape Gogibērámēs, which had been built by spirits. He walked on the beach of Melekéiok out to the reef, where he found an empty debúsōg-triton horn shell. He made a hole in it and blew in it, whereupon all his companions fled in terror. However, soon all galid spirit of the neighborhood gathered there and wanted to have the triton’s horn, which is known since that time.

¹ others say it is Goldalmelég from Melekéiok.

Story 94a. The Female Director Of The Pleiades.

Meloódau ra mesíkt,

log.: bai 5 IV^a, bai 16 III^b illustr. d.-pl. 14^d, bai 29 IV^b illustr. d.-pl.14^e, bai 43 II^b illustr. d.-pl.14^d, bai 51 II^b illustr. d.-pl. 14^b, bai 106 III^a illustr. 14 in Vol. 5.

An old woman named Meloódau ra mesíkt, lived on the foothills Gogibērámēs nearby Melekéiok, where on top of the rock the place Ngairámēs was situated. Whenever the Pleiades rose in the evening, she sat on the rock and made the gólei magic called Golóodo ra mesíkt. Its magic causes the seven sisters to travel slower, because whenever they rose quickly, sickness came upon earth, young people soon became gray, loosing all their teeth, etc. The magic was directed towards the leader of the constellation, by the name of Derungul’lau¹, who caused the moon and the Pleiades to often come close together. One day, the old woman turned into a stone and so the magic was lost.

Story 94b. The Origin Of White Hair.

Once upon a time, a woman in Melekéiok walked out on Gádēs igēbil, the pier of Ngērang, which has long since been destroyed by the sea. There she shouted a spell against aging to the stars. Galid spirit Derungul’lau noticed this (see story 94a) and before she even finished her gólei, he suddenly made his appearance and frightened her so much that she at once got white hair, something that formerly did not exist in Palau. Since then, Palauans get white hair and bad teeth in old age.

Story 95a. Damálasói From Ngērang With The Flies.

log.: bai 14 VIII, bai 48 V^a illustr. d.-pl. 14^f, bai 117 w. illustr., bai 124 II^a Vol. 5 illustr. 17.

Damál a sói was lazy. When heavy loads had to be carried, he pretended sickness and limped behind the others. Therefore, he was the last one to be attacked by the flies.

Story 95a. The Man Who Slept Without Limbs.

log.: bai 29 VI^a illustr. d.-pl. 15^a.

Dedēbelngót, the galid spirit from Ngaramelég nearby Melekéiok, used to take off arms and legs when he slept. Then, when he woke up and needed them, he called them.

Story 96. Rekesiváng’s Tree Trunk ².

log.: bai 11 IV^b, bai 16 VI^b, bai 23 V^b, bai 35 VI^b, bai 71 III^b, bai 77 II^b, bai 84 I, bai 89 II^a, bai 95 I, bai 99 I, bai 106 VIII, bai 109 II^a, bai 117 V^b, bai 120 I illustr. d.-pl. 15^a, bai 133 V^b, bai 138 IV^a, bai 142 III^b, bai 144 VIII, bai 152 I, see also A.B. MEYER ’81 pl. 5, row 14.

People of Ngarevíkl, a village in Ngatēlngál wanted to bring the felled trunk of an ukal’l-acacia tree from the mountain to the lowland, so that rubak Tēbáng could carve a canoe from it. Yet, when they had reached the low grounds, the trunk slid. He discovered that it was because of his father, whose galid was angry about the son’s bad behavior.

Thus, Tēbáng went back to Ngarevíkl and cared of his father, until this one asked him one day why he was suddenly treating him so nicely. Then Tēbáng revealed the old man, that he only wanted to sooth his anger, which was the cause for the trunk’s fall into the swamp. Then Rekesiváng went to the grave of his mother, supporting himself with the help of a staff, he told her that the family-god was responsible for the misfortune of his son, her grandson. He asked her to pacify him. This helped; because, when Tēbáng, with the help of the villagers, tried once again to pull the tree trunk out from the swamp, the enterprise was successful. They sung the following chant while pulling:

¹ WALL. terngueláu, a bigger star behind the Pleiades, it is considered to be the navigator.

² The name is obviously connected with Ngivál, a Rékes ivál, he is rubak VIII from Ngaremegaŭ.

ongúrs o ngersél a Rekesiváng.	The pull, his pull of Rekesiváng.
a kér‘regar a begīs,	Tree get up,
ěngak a Rekesival’ li,	because I am Rekesiváng,
ma kěkmal l mōngil’¹,	and you are very kind,
á kér‘regang!	oh tree!

Story 97. How Tagėtbós Brought The First Betel-Vine To Earth And

What His Swelling Brought Him.

log.: bai 109 V^b illustr. pl. IX^b.

Tăgetbós, rubak I of Ngarevikl, lived in Ngaremadelíang in blai IX. Whenever, he ate or drank, he first called on his local god in the following manner:

Mangerengúr lě goálăg mongá ěkúnga kung, molim, ěkulim kung

Mangerengur you eat, afterwards I will eat, you drink, afterwards I will drink.

The galid spirit was very happy about this and appeared one day to ask him, what kind of wish he had. When Tăgetbós did not answer, the galid spirit said, “You shall see my place” and he carried him along to heaven. He showed him everything there, yet, told him that he was not allowed to take anything with him, except a betel-pepper vine. Tăgetbós took it with him and planted it next to the Ngaremadelíang-house, where it is still standing today. All the other betel-vines stem from this plant. Tăgetbós married a woman from blai III, Gomangĭl. Soon afterwards, his scrotum swelled so much ² that it filled an entire part of the house. When his wife noticed this, she ran away.

One day, a young girl from blai II Delkóng came to Ngaramadelíang, in order to ask for fire. She asked the rubak for it, and he replied: Here is the fire, take it yourself, because I cannot move. — The girl entered the house, stepped over the swelling and got the fire. He asked her: Are you not afraid of this mass? — She denied this. He continued: When you have delivered the fire, come back, I want to tell you something. — The girl did as she was told, and after she had delivered the fire, she returned. Now he told her to go to the end of the swelling where she should press it a bit with her foot. She gingerly stepped on it, and at once, almond-pudding, a ulėld-dishes and other sweets were discharged. Surprised about this she looked at him questioningly. He shouted to her: Take it all home, your family shall enjoy it, and when you have delivered it come back, you shall be my wife! — Pleased the girl agreed to all of this and moved into Tăgetbós’ house.

After a short while, the rubak organized a big mur-feast for his young wife. He hired a kereóměl-fishermen’s guild, who caught fish for him, and he had great amounts of taro delivered; everything else he had himself. Now the entire swelling was emptied. When all the delicacies were out, he asked his wife to press even more. He shouted: Press more, ever more, first the saltwater has to come out! Soon it flowed out in streams, and streamed towards his ex-wife’s house; and when his wife pressed even more, a large quantity of money came out, until the scrotum finally was the same size as that of other men. They paid all the expenses for the feast, and were rich and happy, while the ex-wife was irritated.

Story 98. The Woman a Ilabangelĭl Tamaorsėl From Ngaráus, And The Destruction Of Ngirateĭ³, And How The Owl Came To Palau.

log.: bai 91 II^a illustr. d.-pl. 31^{c?}, bai 92 VII^b, bai 104 II^a, bai 105 VI^a illustr d.-pl. 15^b, bai 145 VII.

One day a small girl, called Ilabangelĭl, from blai IV a Ipel’lú in Ngaráus, fished together with other girls and found a shell, called geielėl a mangerengér “pillow of the water snake”. She took it home and slept with it on a ngot-taro-pounding-board. When the snake mangerengér, which actually was gaild Ngirateĭ, came to look for its pillow, it could not find it. Therefore, he crawled on land, looking so long until he found it at midnight with the small girl. Ngirateĭ took her on the ngot-board, together with the shell, away.

He brought his prize to his sleeping place a Ptágės ěól’l, a small village nearby Ngėóng in Ngerárd, where he had his residence in the large ptágės-callophyllum tree. There he raised the girl and after she had grown up, he took her as his wife. Ilabangelĭl gave birth to Turukúrukung ¹, a boy and then to the owl gėsúg. When the boy had grown up, he asked his father: Can I cut off the large branch of the tree, to make a canoe from it? — The father allowed it and Turukúrukung build a vehicle, because his mother was homesick and wanted to go home. When it was finished, she fled with both her children, the owl always flying ahead and showing the way. Yet, when they were not far away from her home, Ngirateĭ, who had noticed their flight, caught up with them. Turukúrukung fought with him and speared him. With his axe he cut the snake into 4 pieces, which drifted away with the current. The head came to Ngaráus, the tail to Ngrĭl, however, both middle parts reached Ngarbagėd and Ngėrupesáng, the main places of a Ugėl’lėgalíd.

Others claim that one part drifted also to Ngatkíp and one to Gámliangěł ². After the dismemberment was accomplished, they sailed on and arrived at night in front of Táog ra ipel’lú, the channel of Ipel’lú. Now the owl flew into the settlement in front of blai a Ipel’lú and chanted:

gėsú gugúg, gėsú gugúg	Owl hoohoo! Owl hoohoo!
a Turukúrukung, a Turukúrukung	Turukúrukung, Turukúrukung
ma Ilabangelĭl	and Ilabangelĭl
a ngára madál a táog	are at the head of the channel
ra Tamaorsėl ěáng!	Tamaorsėl, hoho!

Afterwards the owl flew back to both of them. Hearing this chant, Rubak Gabekėu said: Follow it and have a look who is out there. — So the occupants of the house went out, found the trio, and brought them in. The canoe broke; the pieces can still today be seen there. Thus, the owl came to Palau.

Story 99. The Mangrove, The Crabs’ Mother.

log.: bai 45 II^a illustr. d.-pl. 15^c, bai 68 II^b illustr., bai 121 IV^b illustr. d.-pl. 28^c (?), bai 140 IV^a.

Just as Gólei in the north and Ngurusár in the south of Babeldáob had an underground connection because of two breadfruit trees, their roots of which grew towards each other (story 33), Ngátpang in the west and Nggėsár in the east were connected by two mangrove bushes. The mangrove is considered to be the mother of all crabs. A long time ago, there were many in Ngátpang, now they have spread everywhere. A man named a Rgivėl caught an immense number of crabs during easterly winds in Ngátpang, during winds from the west in Nggėsár. One day, when he had caught quite a lot and came out of the mangrove swamp with wide spread hands, the mother said: What do you want? — Since he remained silent, she continued: You caught all my children and now you also want me? If you want to catch crabs, you only have to take the right pincher! — a Rgivėl followed this advice and acted accordingly, therefore today, there are still so many crabs. Everywhere people like to eat the black gamáng-mangrove crabs, only in Ngardmău this is forbidden, because people consider them to be galid-spirits.

¹ The word indicates a bird, which is not known; turútum is the young Nycticorax (KUB. V p. 39) and dėrúdėm is the DDiodon-fish, which likes to moan.

² others say it is Goldalmelėg from Melekėiok.

Story 100. Tangrĕgói’s Long House.

and Pelú ra lămád, the Place of Everlasting Life.

log.: bai 8 IV^b, bai 21 V^b, bai 24 IV^a illustr., bai 40 II^b illustr. d.-pl. 15^d, bai 47 V^a, bai 66 I illustr. d.-pl. 15^e, bai 80 I, bai 114^{br}, bai 124 III^b, bai 151 I.

A woman lived in Ngarengasáng with two sons, about whom she was very worried. Every time, when they went fishing, she kept some taro for them, so they always had food to eat when they returned. Yet, the woman got older and they were afraid to loose her. Therefore, they decided to look for some magic, so that their mother would not die. They sailed to the west and came to an island on which a long house stood. It was called Gegomángĕl blai and galid spirit Tangregói lived in it together with his wife. The house was so long that the owner of the house had never managed to finish to thatch the roof. As soon as he had finished at one end, the other one became dilapidated.

When the two men came into the vicinity of the house they heard the words: Give me this! give me this! — in constant repetition, so that they thought a lot of people were inside. Yet, they only found an old man, by the name of Tangregói and his wife. After a short while of conversation, explaining the reason for their journey, the old man sent both of them further on to the place Pelú ra díak lămád, the “place of non dying”, where they saw people, who were green by overgrowth. They turned to the chief of the settlement and presented him their request. He told them, he knew some good magic. They said: give it to us! Our mother is poor, when she dies we will be lost. — Then he gave them a sis-twig and said: When you come home put it into your mother’s bathing water. When she takes her bath she will emerge rejuvenated! —

The two brothers returned home with the dracaena-twig and did as they had been told. Their mother really emerged like a young girl from the water. But she had another young daughter, who did not recognize her mother any more and was inconsolable. This saddened the old woman so that she returned into the water and at once became old again. Now the magic had lost its power, and the mother had to die like everyone else.

It is said about Tangregói, that he travelled to Palau on board of a gosĕgósu spathe and his canoe stranded in the south of Babeldáob, where today’s Island Gosĕgósu is located. Another legend reports that he came to Ngatpang and had brought a lot of money from afar. On the west coast, in Ngartúkür, the water Ngaregókl is also supposed to flow out of Pelú ra díak lămád.

Story 101a. The Fish Trap Of Ngarsúl

log.: bai 9 VII^b illustr. d.-pl. 15^f, bai 68 V^a, bai 133 VII^a.

Rekevis from Dmágĕl and Rekebés, also called Ngiragorkóu from Meróng, were good friends. Often they went fishing together. Once at night, when they both went out on their raft to look at their găbingĕl-fish traps, they found many fish inside. They took them out and brought to shore. On the next morning Rekevis started to divide the fish. Then Rekebés said: I only want three fish. — Answering his friend’s question for the reason, he continued: My wife is does not treat me well. You can take the fish. When I am hungry I will come to you. — Rekevis answered: Why did you not tell me before? — Rekebés replied: How then? My wife also treats me badly at night. We sleep at opposite ends of the house. — Then Rekevis said: Well! Just wait, I will take care of it. — The following night he put coconut shells on his fingers and, while Rekebés slept fully covered in mats, Rekevis slowly approached the house creating a lot of noise. The woman, who was plaiting, asked her husband, what this was, but when he did not answer, she was gripped by fear so that she fled from her part of the house into the arms of her husband. Then everything was well again.

Story 101b. The Punished Dugong Catch.

log.: bai 36 VI^b illustr. d.-pl. 15^f.

One day, Gad ra Ngarsúl caught a dugong, which made him rich. Therefore, when someone caught a dugong, people used to attack the possessions of such a lucky person.

Story 102a. The Broken Canoe From Ngardórok.

log.: bai 1 II^a, bai 4 VII^a, bai 5 II^b, bai 11 II^b, bai 21 VII^a, bai 29 III^a illustr.

d.-pl. 16^a, bai 36 X, bai 51 II^a.

A long, long time ago, there was a woman, called Gĕbil Ngarsúl, who was rubak I in Ngardórok, which is situated on the upper part of Ngarsúl’s channel. Since she was rich, she bought two war canoes, kabékl, in Nggamaséd for the galid spirit of her place. However, when they were rowed up the channel, one of them knocked against the rock Ngomeóngĕl and broke into three pieces. When the woman came from Nggamaséd to look for the canoe, she shouted while she navigated backboard or starboard, molú or ketelí, as the course they had to follow might be to the left or the right to avoid an accident. Thus, the woman showed the men how to navigate.

Story 102b. The Terrible Lead Singer From Ngardórok.

log.: bai 64 VII^a illustr. d.-pl. 16^b.

Once upon a time, when a ruk-dance was performed in Ngardórok, the lead singer did not pay attention. The men horsed around on stage and put on female skirts. When the wife of the lead singer came, he stepped down from the stage and went away with her. Then the other ones also started to leave and cursed him.

Story 103. The Association Of Birds Of Ngarameskáng.

log.: bai 2 IV^a, bai 4 IV^a illustr. d.-pl. 15^e, bai 7 VI^a, bai 13 II^b, bai 25 III^b, bai 51 VII^b, bai 79 III^a, bai 89 III^b, bai 95 VII^a, bai 98 III^b, bai 106 II^b, bai 152 VII^a illustr.

Ngaragarm, an association of birds in Ngarameskáng, went to Ngátpang, in order to get a woman. The egret and the fruit bat, the two ugliest ones, stayed behind. However, the association was unsuccessful and returned without any woman. Then these two offered to travel there and to try their luck. It is true, the ones, who had just returned home, thought that these two ugly ones would never be successful, when they themselves had already failed, but both of them started their journey and sailed away with canoe. The fruit bat was navigating, while the egret speared some fish. Thus, they arrived with a considerable amount of fish in Ngátpang and they gave them to the woman, who was very happy about it. Since her parents also advised her so, she decided to accept the offer of this pair and sailed with them to Ngarameskáng. Those, who had stayed behind, were very much ashamed that these two ugly ones had managed to get a wife, and they, the beautiful ones had not. According to some other information, the club went to Sagaraimül’s daughter in a Imül in a Imelĭk. At night after their arrival, the fruit bat gathered all the palm syrup and all the almonds of a Imelĭk and deposited his offer on the stone platform in front of blai I Terékĕd. The suitors made a big almond-fish from it that was sold for one kluk. The girl, however, became Golik’s mistress.

Story 104. The Decline of Ngarameskáng.

Dam lĕ galid was the god of Roispelú, on the mountain a Gatiroír. He was the servant of rubak I Gobakraibedagál in Ngarameskáng, while the settlement Ngŭkl provided the porters, who carried the old chief around on a stretcher.

The village a Irúr went fishing for him and burnt lime for his house, whose women in childbed were cared for by blai Ngoseklí in a Nglabáng (a Iméungs). All the doves which were caught and killed, and all the eggs of the Megapode had to be delivered to him. In short, Gobakraibedagál was a very powerful chief and his village was cocky. For a long time he had a friendship with Melekéiok, but one day, when people from there came through Ngarameskáng to attack a Imeungs and asked for a magic potion for boldness and courage, the Meskang-people attacked and killed them. It is said the galid spirit of Ngükl deceived them. After this criminal act, the villagers send a message to a Imeungs, and people from there picked up the bodies and piled them at the village-bai Gorúkei.

From this time on, people of Ngarameskéang were afraid and established the colony Roispelú on a Gatirofr. This settlement also vanished, and around 1860, only few houses supposedly still existed there. 1908 only Kêraî, rubak I of Ngabúkêd, remained and he lived in a Imeungs. He was the last one of the village of Roispelú and was a relative of a Raklaî 8 Temól, whose father had been Góbak ra ibedagál of Roispelú and gave Keraî the br’rak-piece of money Mekédkúd as a heirloom. The following chant, sung when Ngarameskang was abandoned, is also from Keraî:

Ng mo peluál a ngará Tot ¹	What kind of a country is Tot,
l dou rengrengí	that we long for it
ma bod ë mēdúrs	and when we go to lie
a le moáis ²	at night
ë kerdí me kerengáng ³	we are only open-eyed.
a bo medelí ⁴ a úngíl	We want to create a good
l pelú ra Tegebóug ⁵	place in Tegebóug,
l ë dokól ⁶ mor Meskáng	because we abandoned Meskáng
ë dosúrog ⁷ a dëgel ⁸ .	We will restore the desolate taro patches

Story 105. How a Risesîl’s Wife Was Helped By Her Three Daughters.

log.: bai 4 VI^b, Bai 85 III^a.

The wife of rubak a Risesîl from Ngarameskáng, was Uedíl railámēs Kldololél, a sister of Góbakrailámēs. She had three daughters, a Ulekiemóng, Blságël, and a Ulekéd uělél. The first one married to a Imelîk, the second one to NgatěIngál, and the third one to Ngátpang. One day, the old woman sent a child to call a friend to come and plait (mangáus). The child, however, not understanding its task correctly, invited all the women of the village to come and plait. When a Uedíl looked through the door of her house, there were women everywhere.

Then she cried: Oh child, you should have invited one friend or a few. Now I have a full house, and we have nothing to eat. — Still she welcomed all of them politely, although she was embarrassed. After some time, she suddenly heard noise on the path to a Imelik, and when she looked outside, people came with loads of food from there. Thus, they suddenly had to eat and to drink. Soon afterwards, there was noise on the Ngatpang-path, and a bit later, loads of food came also from there. Not long afterwards, noise was heard on the path to NgatěIngál, and the third daughter had helped her mother, too. All got up to help the porters with their loads and began to dance spontaneously. Delighted the woman sang: direkák ng dēká áígāi, ë turoká ulekeiēmóng! not yet have we eaten this, then it is already overtaken! When a Risesîl saw all this, he got very angry and wanted to hit the dancers, his wife, though, grabbed his genitals and sang:

¹ Tot name for Ngarameskáng.

² moáis = *klebesē*night

³ makár open eye.

⁴ medelí = merul’li to make it.

⁵ Tegebóug is in-between Ngaremeskáng and Roispelú.

⁶ dokór to give up.

⁷ mesúrěg to set right.

⁸ dëgel barren taro patch.

ngara lagád a Risesîl di omár a di opāu!

What kind of human being is a Risesîl, he hits only strongly, he hits only softly!

Then a Risesîl stopped and left them alone.

Story 106. Iluai ra ilámēs’ Good Sons.

log.: bai 59 IV^a illustr. d.-pl. 16^c, bai 71 III^a.

The old woman a Iluai ra ilámēs lived in Ngarameskáng. She had two sons, who married to Ngarebökü and Blissang. They, however, did not forget their old mother and sent her taro and bananas day-by-day. The old woman’s female friends liked this very much and were dancing around the food when it arrived. The sons are remembered as the “good sons”.

Story 107. The Betel Nut Palm of Ngesisëg¹

(a búög ra Ngesisëg).

log.: bai 21 ^w, bai 114 ^{br}see also KUB. VIII pl. 44³.

A man from blai AIterirír and one from blai Skemesúk in Ngesisëg, a long-deserted place, climbed a betel nut palm. The first one, a simpleton, took only a ngaptákl-foot-sling with him, therefore he soon fell down from exhaustion, and nobody knows what happened to him. The man from Skemesúk, however, took along a basket filled with coconuts and a goremáel-sitting-board, normally used to clean buög-palms. Thus, he could take a rest, eat, and sleep at night. Constantly climbing up and resting, he finally reached the iliud-stone-platform of a Ugél‘lē galid in heaven. When the god saw the tree moving, he said: This is my man, the one coming now.

— He received him in a friendly manner and called him his cousin. Yet, he made him also aware, that, should he stay a long time with him, he was not supposed to open the kim-shell in the other part of the house. The Ngesisëg-man withstood the temptation for a long time, then one day, he gave in. After he had opened the shell, he saw his village and his friends below, he was sized by homesickness and wept. When a Ugél‘lē galid saw him crying, he said to him: Since you disobeyed me, you have to return to earth. What would you like to take along?

— The foreigner saw a man, whose skin was strangely striped and painted yellow, cutting palm wine. He liked this so much, that he wanted to have the color. However, this was a person suffering from ringworm, who had covered himself with reng-color, curcuma yellow. As he wanted to have it, a Ugél gave him a monggóngg-leaf blade filled with it saying: Go home and open the bundle in the rubak-bai. Each one should rub the ears and the skin with it, and should not wash for a few days. —All happened like this, and therefore, Ngesisëg first got ringworm, then the women of Ngërugóp in Ngátpang, who had been mongol in the bai of Ngesisëg. Then, the búög-palm collapsed and its crown hit the ground in Ngaregamaîin Gorëör, creating the hole Lemau ra búög in the water. However, the hill, on which it stood, is called a Úgul a búög “the trunk of the betel palm” and can today still be seen east of a Iméúngs ².

Story 108. The Pinned Thief Of Ngesisëg

also called Melebútěl ra Itebáng “Theft of Palm Juice in Itebáng”.

log.: bai 5 II^a illustr. d.-pl. 16^d, bai 14 V^a, bai 96 w.,

see also A.B. MEYER ’81 pl. 5 row 5.

A man from Ngesisëg discovered that every morning some of his palm wine was missing. In order to catch the thief, he placed a fishing hook into the drink, and rolled the string to his house in a Rois, in order to hook the thief. The following morning, he had Gamaraîëk from a Rois on the line.

¹ compare with story 52.

² see Vol. 2, Ngatidëóngël, whose rubak I was called Bedul ra krongol, the klobak: Ngarikrongol.

Thereupon, the fisherman gave his captive, who served him, daily a bit of palm wine. The birds, too, had sipped from the palm wine. In addition, the fruit bat, which also was attached to the line, had eaten two galebúgép-pieces from the money tree palāu re gúr, therefore, these have holes. Symbolically, the thief seems to be the morning star and thus the place a Rois would be the heaven a iángěd.

Story 109. Ngiraibaberóng, The Galid spirit Of Ibareróng.

log.: bai 78 IV^b illustr.

One evening Pedú re kiüěd from Ngesisěg in Ngaramlungúi went fishing with his derāu-nets. Ngiraibaberóng, the Galid spirit of a Ibareróng ¹, who also wanted to catch some fish, came to the same spot. Every time, when this one caught a měás-fish, he shouted: klou lě goálag! a large sea urchin! — and threw it away. When Pedú re kiüěd recognized this behavior, he said: Give him to me instead! — This pleased the galid spirit, and soon the two of them became friends and they made an appointment to meet again the following night. When they returned home and reached the grassland of a Nglbáng, they heard a lament. Ngiraibaberóng said: Stay here and guard the fish, I will have a look at the funeral. — He went down to the house, where the corpse was lying, took the logúl, the shadow of the deceased, and returned to his friend.

When this one saw him with the shadow, he ran away. Ngiraibaberóng was angry about this. He took the fish, brought them, together with the shadow, to Ibareróng, where he laid both of them down. Then he went to Ngesisěg, where Pedúl, after having washed and oiled himself, was already asleep in the bai. The galid spirit entered the Bai and sniffed around, who among the sleeping persons could be his fishing companion. Then he smelled salt on the soles of a man’s feet, who therefore should be the one he had been looking for. Indeed, Pedúl had forgotten to wash and oil the soles of his feet. Since he was fast asleep Ngiraibaberóng lifted him up together with the floor plank and carried him away on his head. On the way, though, he passed underneath an uósog-tree and when the twigs brushed Pedúl, he woke up and held on to the branches. However, Ngiraibaberóng did not notice this, but carried the plank home, where he threw it into a ravine. Yet, when he looked down there for his victim, he could not find it.

Thus, he went once again to Ngesisěg, whereto Pedúl had already returned. Again he was deep asleep. Again the galid spirit lifted up the sleeping man together with his plank, but Pedúl awoke again under the uósog-tree and returned. When Ngiraibaberóng had repeated this a third time, Pedúl re kiúed awoke the entire Bai and they all armed themselves with a debúsög-triton horn shell and some clubs. When they saw the galid spirit approaching, they started to make such a noise, that he ran away and did not come back.

Story 110. The Fat a Ilúluk.

log.: bai 10 II^a illustr. d.-pl. 16^c.

A fat man, called a Ilúluk, lived in Ngadesiúr, in Ngaramlungúi. One day, the fishermen came to him and said: a Ilúluk, there are many fish outside. — He really wanted to go out, but he was too fat and weak. So they carried him to the canoe and sailed out at sea with him and placed the fishing line in his hand. Whenever a fish had bitten, he gave back the line and one of the three pulled it in and recovered the fish.

Story 111. The Dispute Of The Men’s Clubs.

log.: bai 73 VIII illustr.

Once upon a time, the men’s club Ngarabagitú from Ngěroutegeĩ in Ngaramlungúi went fishing to the reef Goirúl. They made a fence from coconut leaves, in order to surround the fish at low tide. While they were working, the men’s club Ngardesépek came down from heaven and also wanted to fish. Both clubs clashed with each other and got into a fight. One of the galid spirit grabbed one of the men from Ngěroutegeĩ and wanted to fly away with him.

¹ The pass is east of a Gatiroir, where the village Roispelú was situated.

But the companions of the man hit the galid spirit, so that it fell down. However, when they wanted to give him the final blow, he turned into a fish and escaped. This ended the dispute and the galid spirit returned to heaven.

Story 112. How Goréör And a Imeúngs Became Friends ¹.

(ca. 1780, see Vol. 1).

The Melekéiok-people had called some villages together in order to wage war against Goréör, yet, they did not dare to start the fight, because they were too weak. Therefore, they abandoned this plan and decided instead to attack Ngaramlungúi. When Ngirturóng in a Imeúngs heard about it, he sent a messenger to a Ibědul, that Melekéiok was soon going to attack him. If they saw a fire on Rois mlungúi they should soon bring help. At the same time, he ordered an old woman, living on the mountain, to light the fire, when the enemy attacked. Soon afterwards, the warriors of Meleléiok came and the old woman at once lit the fire on a Gatiroir. At that time, a thief on a tree in Goréör saw the fire and shouted immediately: On Rois mlungúi a big fire is burning; the fire is a bad sign. — Then a Ibědul talked: Warriors from Melekéiok attacked Ngaramlungúi, let us go there! — So the Goréör-warriors sailed there, helped the Ngaramlungui-people, and slew most of the Melekéiok-people dead. Therefore, Goréör and a Imeúngs are friends.

Story 113. Garagár And Gělagáng, And The Destruction Of a Uluáng

besides Rengĩl’s Money-Snake Bageĩ ra Uluáng.

log.: bai 15 III^a, bai 16 I illustr. pl. XIV 25, bai 35 illustr. d.-pl.16^d, bai 38 II^b, bai 55 e., (bai 59 VIII), bai 72 e., bai 135 I.

Two brothers, Garagár and Gělagáng, lived in the village Ngěráir that belonged to Ngival. One day, they speared in the lagoon of the reef the sardine-like měkěbúd-fish. Garagár sent his younger brother with a basked full of them to their father, who poured the fish on a gongál-wooden plate. Gělagáng was hungry and wanted to have something to eat. Since the father had only one piece of taro, a rare treat in those days, which was supposed to last for both sons, he gave Gělagáng one half. After eating his share he returned to the channel with the empty basket. His brother filled this one again and sent Gělagáng with it to the old man, who once gain was asked for food. Thus, the father gave his son also the second half of the taro. After Gělagáng had also eaten this one, he went again to the channel and brought the empty basket along. Now Garagár filled it for the third time. Since he had also grown hungry, he went together with Gělangáng to the house of their father, who had nothing to eat any more and related what had happened. The older one got angry and shouted:

kedí letkí gělagáng, ě diák m letkí a gáragar!

you only think of today, but do not think of tomorrow!

He climbed a coconut palm and plucked a ripe but still green nut, called goldimél a l mēkěbúd in this stage of development, he roasted some of the měkěbúd-fish and ate it together with the kernel of the nut. Then he took his father’s money, because he knew where it was buried, and went away to Ngarameskáng. Just at that time, a women’s club had gathered in a house to work there. They called him and asked him where he was going to. He replied: to the western side. — The women kept him with them over night, hoping to get some money from him, but he left the next morning without having given anything. He came to a Uluáng and asked for rubak II, a Rengĩl. Someone in his house said he was down at the channel. Thus, Garagár went there and sat down to wait for the chief. When some fishermen arrived he asked them, where a Rengĩl was. They pointed him out and he turned to him saying, he had come in order to serve him. — Good, a Rengĩl replied, wait until all the fishermen have arrived, then we will go up together. —

¹ This story is not from my collection, but it was, in poor German spelling, part of the bai in Leipzig.

After all the fishermen had arrived, Garagár took the fish and carried them up, prepared them and placed them into a pot. After all had eaten, a Rengīl sent his women into another house, while he slept with Garagár in the main house.

At the same time, a bolóbol-women’s visit from Ngarekobasáng was in a Uluáng and time had come to pay the women, who had bestowed their favors on us. Yet, a Rengīl was broke. The following morning, the demand for payment arrived. He said to Garagár: What am I supposed to do, I have no money! — Several messengers came, still there was no satisfying answer for them. Garagár asked for the reason and when he learned the truth, he said: When they come back, tell them you are prepared! — When Rengīl objected that he could not do so Garagár said: Do it nevertheless! — whereupon the rubak sent a positive reply. As soon as this was done, the rubak of a Uluáng sent a súběd called messenger-canoe, to Ngarekobasáng, that they were ready. The komedáol-canoe ¹ immediately came from there and it was decided the departure would take place the very next day. After night had fallen, Garagár told a Rengīl, to get a ripe, old bunch of betel nuts; this was quickly done.

As soon as the women had left, Garagár opened the nuts and put some of his money inside; then he filled an a ulóik-basket with them. In the morning, this basket was brought in front of the foreign rubak, who started laughing about Rengīl’s gift and they ridiculed him. Then they sailed away. A sister of Rengīl was married with Reblūd, rubak I of Galěgúi. When a Rengīl was sailing south with the rubak, he took the basket at Cape Pkurengesúkl and jumped into the water shouting to his people: Go to Ngarekobasáng and report that I want to get a piece of money from my brother-in-law ². —

Completely wet and looking exhausted, he came to Reblūd and complained, that the chiefs of Ngarekobasáng had dragged him along, and that he had nothing. Then Reblūd ordered that each one of his sisters should have ready a piece of money worth a madál a kluk. Yet, he himself gave Rengīl one kluk, so that he could present it as his portion, his bleaktěl. Then he even took the precious br’rak-piece, by the name of Bederīg, from his wife, so that it would now belong to her brother.

When a Rengīl arrived with his basket in Ngarekobasáng, the rubak of a Uluáng had already handed over their bletákěl, as they did not expect anything from their first rubak. However, they got it back, because their pieces of money were not valuable enough. He asked them about it and they told him: gosěgěkil ³ came back, and with it come all blekátěl back. — Then a Rengīl said: Bring them to me, I want to see them! — They brought him all the pieces of money, and he put them in baskets. Then he took his br’rak Bederīg and added it as golsěgěkil. Then, he inquired about all the pieces of money and who had given them, he placed them into his basket and put a beautiful madál a kluk in their place. All the rubak were surprised how he had gotten so much money.

When the payment was finished, Garagár said to Rengīl: Come, let us share our basket, you take half and return home and I go with my share to a Idíd in Goréör. Thus, each one of them earned a lot of money. Soon a Rengīl was back in a Uluáng. He proposed to the rubak of this place: Tomorrow, we will exhibit our money. They agreed and were surprised about Rengīl’s wealth, when he filled the exhibition-stone twice ⁴. People suspected he had hit on the snake Bageī ⁵, while he had been sharpening his green gorúsóg-pounder.

¹ mesúběd to send a message, komedáol, nowadays used as “thank’s”.

² Each rubak gets the money for such business transfers from his sister, even when he already has the money for the intended purpose already.

³ his share, that is to say the one of rubak I, blekátěl, normally the allotment of the rubak.

⁴ see Vol. 3 money.

⁵ The story about Bagei rauluáng, shown on log. pl. XIV 25, goes like this: The wife of Rengīl went with the wife of rub. I Goukerděu to the taro patch and they saw the snake. They did not bring home any taro, therefore, Rengīl scolded his wife. Then she told him about the snake. He sharpened his adze at the river, went to the field, and when he saw the tail of the animal, he hit it. Then a lot of money came out of it. Thus, he became wealthy and became a rubak.

However, this narrative reports the true story about Rengīl’s wealth. Around that time, the village a Uluáng oppressed the main village a Iméungs. One day, the rubak of a Uluáng took the women of a Kláng, blai I in a Iméungs, into their bai and kept them there all day long. When the women left the bai in the evening, they felt so sick that they had to lie down. They reported everything to Ngirakláng, who got very upset about it. At once he sent a messenger to Ulimáng, to ask rubak I Bagés, if he could not help him to destroy a Uluáng. He agreed, gathered his friends in Ngel‘lau, which was part of Ngivál.

Together they came to a Iméungs and from here they destroyed the place. When this was accomplished, Ngirakláng tried to compensate his accomplices with money or with mongol, they, however, refused both. After repeated questioning, they said they wanted a Iméungs I bad, Milad’s stone, and they also received it. As Ulimáng was afraid that Ngabúkěd might break the stone, it gave it to its friend Ngel‘lau, where it is still lying next to bai Gólilai. Yet, people from a Uluáng fled to Ngardmau, where they settled in Ngërutói and they also took along the money-exposition-stone¹ olegětókõl ra udoud.

Story 114. The Carefree Ngaremedángěp.

log.: bai 43 IV^b illustr. d.-pl. 16^e.

Once upon a time, the now deserted village Ngaramedángěp in Ngaramlungúi was so powerful, that the large place Ngatpáng was under its control. In Palauan terms it was its kér. When people from Ngaramedángěp came through Ngatpáng and it rained, they took the roofs off the houses, in order to use them as umbrellas. When the situation became especially bad, the oppressed people decided to take revenge. One day, one of them went into their village and told the people: Go fishing, many fish are out there. — Then they all hurried away. When the village was empty, the man set the houses on fire. The settlement became impoverished and Ngatpáng gained power. The ones, who had gone fishing, had gone out too far and just then a passing typhoon caused them to drift away or they perished. The natives insist that the Japanese are descendents of these castaways.

Story 115. The Acquisition Of Fire.

log.: bai 1 III^a illustr. d.-pl. 16^f.

Once upon a time, galid spirit Gobagád lived in Ngūkl, a village of Ngaramlungúi that since then has long been deserted. He had a desire for fire and said so to the rail terīd. This one took a spark from the red patch of its head and blew it into a blaze. Then the galid spirit killed the bird.

Story 116. The Rubak Of Ngarbagéd re ngül.

log.: bai 42 II^a illustr. d.-pl. 17^a (color).

People from Ngarbagéd re ngül brought all the food they could spare to the sister of rubak I a Rmelīk, though not to himself. This made him so angry that he had a big stake built and he said: Make a large fire and all of you walk in there so that you will burn to death. Thus, they all burnt, except for two women, whom an owl had shown a path to Ngerevíkl.

Story 117. The Morning Bird Of Ngarbagéd re ngül.

Tútau² r bagéd re ngül.

log.: bai 3 VII^a illustr. d.-pl. 17^b.

A man from Ngatpáng, by the name a Remarang, went to Ngarbagéd re ngül, in order to collect gogáio-sea birds ³. When he returned home, he saw a bersóiög-boa snake, which had coiled around a tútau-morningbird. He freed the bird and said to it:

¹ see Vol. 2, orthography olekėdokol

² a passerine bird Rectes tenebrosus F. a. H.

³ Puffinus dichotus F. a. H.

ak uso ¹ pelâu ma kau gosopelak ma kerdî kauasóbol l mo garagár!

I am protecting you and you are protecting me and only we are protecting each other in the future!

He let the bird fly, returned home, and forgot about it. One day, he got very sick and was about to die. Then a tutau-bird came and sat on a Dracaena (orredakl) called didmageî, which stood on the gólbed-platform in front of the house. It sang loudly and then flew to the ulîtêg-doormat, under which the sick man was lying. The bird trilled that people should collect Dracaena (orredakl) leaves and crush them in water. When the sick man did not listen to it, it fluttered over him, sat once again on the doormat, then again on the tree, back and forth so long until the sick man remembered. Then his people prepared the potion, he drank it and slowly he recovered his health.

Story 118. The Affectionate Cat.

log.: bai 1 VII^a illustr. d.-pl. 17^c, bai 2 VI^a, bai 9 IV^a illustr. plate XIV 28, bai 15 II^b, bai 31 VIII illustr. d.-pl. 17^b, bai 73 IV^b.

A woman in Ngát pang, called a Teliku, had a daughter, who married to a Imelîk one day. There she was, all alone with her cat. Soon afterwards, the woman died and then the cat ran to the daughter in a Imelûk, crying so long until she finally went with it. Now the daughter prepared the funeral feast, yet, failed to find her mother’s money, because she had buried it. The cat, however, also found this one, by digging at the right spot.

Story 119. The Crocodile Of Ngatpáng.

log.: bai 115 IX^b illustr. d.-pl. 17^d, bai 127*gk.* illustr. d.-pl. 17^e, log.: see A. B. MEYER ’81, plate 5 row 9.

One day, the man Monglodól from Ngátmadeî was crossing a river, when a crocodile dragged him into the river and bit off all his limbs. The body was left over, which people of the settlement found and buried. After this accomplishment the iús swam to Ngatpáng where it also snapped at a human being at the bridge. This one, however, held onto a tree and escaped. He reported this to rubak II Rekâmesíkt, who mobilized the people of his settlement to catch the monster. They prepared a bamboo fence, encircled the monster with it, and beat it to death. However, the Ngatpáng-people did not want to keep the corpse of the animal, therefore they sent a message to a Râklâî in Melekéiok, who also refused. Ngirturóng from a Imeúngs had it brought. Yet, people from this settlement did not eat the crocodile, because they thought a galid spirit lived inside.

Story 120a. The Boastful Spirit Of Ngardúbög.

log.: bai 16 II^a, bai 63 V^a illustr. d.-pl. 16^f.

Once, a spirit from Ngardúbög in Ngát pang boasted in front of a group of galid spirit that he was just as strong as they were. Thus, they invited him to carry a heavy stone together with them. They fetched a long pole, to which they fastened the stone. Then they lifted the load together onto their shoulders and marched off. At a given signal, all galid spirit dropped on their knees, so that Délép bent like a bamboo. Thereupon, they laughed at him and ran away.

Story 120b. The Spondias Tree of Ngát pang.

log.: bai 2 VII^{b?}, bai 4 III^b, bai 61 III^b illustr. d.-pl. 17^a, bai 79 I, bai 89 VII^b, bai 103 VI^a, bai 138 III^a bai 144 II^a, see also A.B. MEYER ’81, plate 3, row 9.

Once upon a time, an a édêl stood between Ngardúbög and Ngimis. When a fruit dropped Ngardúbög took it and Ngimis was left empty handed, because of its weakness. People also said that those from Pelú ra tep were “loud talkers”, while the ones from Pelú ra lúk were the “silent ones”, who acquiesced to the insults when the a édêl-fruit was taken away.

¹ root word olsóbôl, to protect, to rescue.

Story 121a. The Bold Lover In Ngkebedül.

log.: bai 73 VII^b illustr. pl. XIV 22.

Rubak I Gobak ra tkedësâu from Ngardúbög in Ngatpáng had an affair with a woman of a house in Ngkebedül nearby Ngarbagéd re ngûl in Ngaramlungui. One day, he had arranged a rendezvous at the mountain and, therefore, spread some coconut fronds on the ground of the designated place, not far from her house. However, she did not come and a heavy rain started pouring down. So he took one of the fronds and danced, while carrying it in his hands, in front of the woman’s house, who, when she saw him coming, took an a ulêld-dish and danced with it towards him. When seeing this, her husband was so moved that he welcomed Gobak in a friendly way and never suspected anything.

Story 121b. Krâsus, The Deceived Lover.

log.: bai 9 I illustr. d.-pl. 17^f.

The bai-girl Krād e siál was lying together with the ugly Krâsus from Ngát pang in a hut in the forest. When the pigeon hunters from Ngaremeskáng passed by, one of them looked into the house and saw them. He called inside: Krâsus come outside! After this one had followed the calling, the other one went inside and slept with the girl.

Story 122. Kěáng And Siángêldep.

log.: bai 35 V^a.

Siángêldep from Ngabêkai in Ngát pang fell in love with the bai-girl Kěáng, who had been brought from Nggamaséd to his village. He married her. But her family took her away from him, which made her so sad, that she died. Soon afterwards, her spirit came to Siángêldep and, therefore, he decided to exhume her body in Nggamaséd and the soul returned into it. Thus it happened that the lovers were reunited.

Story 123a. The Child From Ngát pang

log.: bai 21 I.

Once upon a time, the rubak of Ngát pang visited a Râklâî in Melekéiok. Contrary to custom, rubak IV had brought a child with him. a Râklaî was so furious about this, that he sent his people to gather firewood, to burn these guests. Then the child said: I want to speak; we are poor and my mother has only riámêl-fruits to eat. I am coming with my father and want to have something to eat from your place. — Now a Râklaî was satisfied, because he realized that this was a special child and his father could not have avoided its coming.

Story 123b. The False Rooster Katiók.

log.: bai 96 illustr. d.-pl. 33^a, bai 98 I.

Katiók, a monster, lived in Ngát pang. It was like a cat but with a long neck that allowed it to imitate the roosters’ crowing, so that chicken came running to it. It grabbed and devoured them.

Story 124. The Corpse Stolen In Ngát pang.

log.: bai 65 I illustr. d.-pl. 18^a.

In Ngát pang, a man had died and was sewn into a mat. Then delép-spirits came, stole the bundle of mats, and carried it away. At the same time, a man had caught a shark in Ngaraús on the east coast and carried it to the west coast. On the way he met the delép with the corpse. Shocked, he threw away his load and crept underneath a tree. The spirits continued their journey, however, one stayed behind and poking a long time for him, in the end he also moved on.

Story 125. The Snake Of Ngadasáker¹.

Ngirasagêsúg, a man from a Imelîk, went into the bush to shoot some pigeons. He built a platform on a tree, covered it with twigs, and occupied himself with hunting pigeons.

¹ Ngadasáker supposedly is a heathland in the vicinity of Ngarsúl (see story 7).

When he returned home, he met a bersóiög-snake in Ngadasákër, where he lived. He seized the branch of a tree and began beating the snake. The mother of the snake saw this, got angry, and sang: uíririririri ! When he looked for the source of the noise, he saw another snake. She was standing erect on its broad tail and her eyes were glowing like fire. Quickly he grabbed his belongings and ran away, but she followed him at his heels. He ran and ran until everything, his pigeons, his bow, and his arrows, had been lost. She followed him as far as his house, where he remained lying exhausted on the stone platform, while the snake stood erect, high above the corner of the gólbed. He became seriously sick and the snake appeared again and again in his dreams until his people made the ash-magic — gólei lagáp —, only then he found his peace and regained his health. Henceforward, he never tortured again an animal.

Story 126a. The Pangium-Tree Of Ngardebotár.

(a ríamēl Ngardebotár)

log.: bai 75 V^b illustr. d.-pl. 18^d.

In Ngardebotár stood a ríamēl close to the house of a rubak. One day, while he was weeding and cleaning the area around his house, his son pick up a fruit of the tree and he reported to his father that it had been nibbled on. Asked who could have done this, the old man replied: The ar ngálek u kerú did that, these are the children of many mothers, who are all different. Nevertheless bring it into the house. Soon another fruit dropped, this one also partially eaten. The boy brought it again to his father and this one said: This was done by the ar ngálek dós, the children of sisters. Put it into the house! — When a third one fell down also damaged and the boy brought it again to his father, he said: This was done by the ngálek ë tedelág, the grand children. — He also asked him to bring this one inside.

Finally, a fourth half eaten one dropped and the son showed it again to his father. Then this one said: This was done by ar ngálek tang, the children of one mother! —Even today it is a rule, that a travel group will get free, when one of its rubak tells this story to the high chief of the hosting place, after they noticed the danger of being attacked and killed in this place. This is because the story refers to the general kinship ties of the Palauans and includes an admonition to tolerance. Not too long ago, a klegádáol from a Imelík is supposed to have benefitted in this manner.

Story 126b. The Long Vine Of Ngardebotár,

log.: A. B. MEYER ‘81, plate 4, row 11 a. pl. 5 row 12.

the kemángēl besēpēs, a kebēas variety, grew out of the navel of a dead man and overgrew the houses. The residents went to Gobagád, the mother of the dead man, and asked her advice. She told them to cut the creeper into pieces and to burn them. They, however, threw them into the sea and created the place Ngarekebēas that later turned into a reef.

Story 127a. The Toilet On The Mountain Klbáiēl.

log.: bai 15 II^a, bai 29 V^b illustr. d.-pl. 18^b, bai 36 IV^a, bai 70 VII^a, bai 84 V^b.

High chief a Irákl of Ngaraklemadēl had become old and feeble, so that he no longer could leave his house to satisfy his physical needs. He had the idea to be carried on a stretcher and as a place for a toilet he choose the top of Mountain Klbáiēl, where some young men had to carry him up. On the way, they sang ele boi, ele mei. However, soon they became tired of doing so and one day the swung him out of the litter, so that he fell down the cliff and was dead.

Story 127b. The Devil On The Mountain Klbáiēl.

log.: bai 130^l illustr. d.-pl. 18^c.

Evil devils, called Túbōglráod or Godomádēl, lived on the mountain Klbáiēl. They prowled about and stole everything they could lay their hands on. Thus, they caused a famine in the villages. In the village Ngaraklemádēl they dragged the dead bodies out of the houses, so that the inhabitants had to hold on to them from the inside. This made the residents angry and they cut the bush all around the village, whereupon the devils fled.

Story 128. The Snake Of Galēgúi.

log.: bai 90 III^b illustr. d.-pl. 18^d.

A bersóiog-snake lived on the grassland Gēuid bersēgél ¹, next to Galēgúi and devoured the inhabitants of the settlement, when they came across the ked. Finally the inhabitants were so afraid, that they fled and moved to another hamlet. They left an old woman behind in the settlement. She lived in a small cave in the bush, never lit a fire so as not to give herself away by the smoke. One day, she felt pregnant and soon afterwards she gave birth to a boy, who quickly grew up. When he had grown up, he asked his mother, “Why don’t you light a fire?” — Then the old woman told him everything that had happened.

The boy did not think long, made a heap of wood, lit it despite the cries of his mother, and threw stone inside. As soon as they were hot, he took them with a tongs and run out to the grassland. At once, he saw the snake approaching him and snapping at him. In the same instant, he threw the glowing stones into its throat, and the monster died. He cut the belly open and took out the intestines, and brought them to the house of rubak I Reblūd. There, he took a gongēsīl-board, heaped them on it, and put it adrift with the following words, “Look for the people from Galēgúi and answer only, when they say, these are the intestines of the snake Gēuid bersēgél, then start swelling and fill the container”². — The board drifted to Ngatmél, where people from Galēgúi were just fishing with their derau-nets. Soon they recognized where these things came from, and then they knew that the monster had been killed. They decided to return to Galēgúi. Some went ahead and landed at the channel Ngertóng, where they met the boy, who had killed the snake. After they heard from him that the monster was really dead they went back and fetched the rest of the people. So, Galēgúi was newly settled.

The boy, however, demanded a reward for himself and his family. First they offered him the head of the almond fish, whenever one was distributed, but he refused. Then they offered him the first almonds of the season, but this too, did not seem enough to him. Only when they said that he should have the taro patches Ngara madál a ralm, he agreed. Therefore, these plantations, at the head of the water, belong to house III Ngerding l ked, and even today, its rubak Meluát has still the right during rubak-meetings to bring his child into the bai, who is then allowed to choose the best of the food offered there.

Story 129. The Savanah Of The Pot Called Ked ra golākáng, Next To Gámliangēl.

When people from Gámliangēl were still resident in the hamlet with the same name in Peliliou, they and their friend Goikúl on Ngurūkdápēl, were mischievous and threatened the villages Ngasiás and Ngardolólók, so that both these settlements united and drove away the scoundrels ³. They turned to Goréōr, where high chief a Ibēdul suggested to find a place in the hamlet Ngaragamér in a Imelík.

¹ the “Seven bersóiög-Snakes”.

² see story 75 a. story 164.

³ It is said that, when fleeing, they left their god a Ugél’légalid behind. Yet, he followed them, together with his small galid spirit, story 98, with whose help he punished them with torture.

They paid a piece of money to a Ibĕdul, so that he would help them. He then also gave a piece of money to Ngarekeāi as goretél a kĕbĕás “removing the creepers”, whereupon the Gámliangĕl-people were allowed to return. Yet, later on, they tried again to gain supremacy and, therefore, Ngarekeāi constantly harassed them.

One day, the woman Túrang, from blai I Ngĕáol in Gámliangĕl married Gĕbegŭl, rubak I from Ngaragamér, and Gĕbegŭl’s sister married Sagarmidár from Mekér on the shore of Ngarekeāi. From time to time, the relatives of blai Ngĕáol visited the place Ngaragamér and for each visit they took along 50 drinking nuts as a present. They also ordered people from Gámliangĕl, who were coming with them, to bring the same amount. Yet, when all the people came with their 100 nuts, the sister of Gĕbegŭl was angry, because they had not brought the nuts to her husband to Mekér. Then they agreed to bring the nuts next time there. Finally rubak Gĕbegŭl argued they should bring everything to Mekér. He died soon thereafter and now the Gámliang-people brought all nuts to Mekér and were well treated there. Sagarmidár actually gave a piece of money to Rŭngŭlbai, so that he would treat Gámliangĕl a bit gentler.

Sagarmidár even went himself to Gámliangĕl and brought offerings to a Ugéllĕgalíd asking him the following: Do not allow all bad influences of Ngarekeāi to come into the village, but let them fall into a pot. Therefore, there is the proverb:

gorepetelél ¹ a mekngit l tekingél Ngarekeāi! It falls the bad behavior of “ !

Afterwards, he buried the pot far away on the grassland, and covered it with two coral slabs; therefore, the grassland is named Ked ra golakáng ². Consequently, Gámliangĕl has a friendship with Sagarmidár and often sends him food and other items.

Story 130. Money Drifting On A Barringtonia fruit.

log.: bai 79 VIII illustr.

A man punted from the channel of Galĕgúi to the headland Pkurengesúkl, in order to get some fish from there. After his arrival he tied up his canoe. A barringtonia-fruit floated past, on which lay a piece of galebúgĕp-money. He took it and sold it to rubak Rungŭlbai in Ngarekeāi. It was called Ngarabidŭl and today it is supposed to be in the possession of Ngirtŭróng of a Iméungs.

Story 131. Delákl, Who Was Lamented by Women.

log.: bai 60 IV^b illustr. d.-pl. 29^a.

At sunset, a man from Ngapedég, called Delákl, was speared at that place. On the next morning, a man from Melekéiok came and also took the head. Delákl’s mother wept, because now her son had died twice. Since he had also been the singer of women’s dances, women grieved a lot for him, they danced around the headless body and then buried him.

Story 132. The Unsuccessful Dugong Fishing.

log.: bai 24 III^a illustr., bai 69 III^a illustr. d.-pl. 18^s, bai 90 V^b illustr. pl. XIV^{II}.

Once upon a time, people from Ngapedég went dugong fishing. When a Ugúp reported the sighting of a mesekiú on the bottom of the sea, they quickly installed the net. According to custom, one after the other dove at once down, in order to drive the animal by pushing it into the net. Yet, the observer had been mistaken and misjudged a dark stone for a dugong. As a result they broke their skulls and limbs and in addition, they were also ridiculed.

¹ from ruépĕtto fall = his fall; tōkói speech, behavior.

² When digging a path, the pot was found by chance. I received some fragments of it and they are now in the museum in Hamburg (nr. 3680 II); it was covered with coral slabs.

Story 133. The Brothers Of Imŭl.

log.: bai 68 III^a illustr.

One day, a man from a Imŭl was hiding with a mongol in-between the high wall-like roots of a breadfruit tree. When he had taken off her apron, and saw her pudenda, he cried: I wish this would be some food that I could offer to my brother. — By chance, this one was also hiding in the roots of the tree, he heard the words and was pleased. On the next morning, the older one dug up the money of the family, had his brother come, and said, “Yesterday, I heard your words in the tree and I see that you love me. I thought you were stupid, but you are not. Take all the money, you will manage it well”.

Story 134a. Rangatágĕl And Rangém.

log.: bai 9 IV^a, bai 17 II^a bai 35 I, bai 37 III^a and III^b, bai 42 VII^a illustr. d.-pl. 18^f, bai 62 VIII, bai 118 III^a.

Ngamsāu, a melkesókl, a single reef, lies between a Iebúkŭl on Goréör and a Imŭl in a Imelĭk. A stone ¹ with two cavities was on the reef, in each of them lived an octopus. One day, Rangém came from a Iebúkŭl and pulled the one on his side out, and after him, came Rangatágĕl from a Imŭl and got the one on his side out. Each one of them wanted to use his octopus as bait for fishing. Yet, they knew nothing about each other.

Soon thereafter, they met, when they returned to the same stone, to get again bait. Rangatágĕl asked Rangém, “Where are you going?” — He replied, “Oh, I just wanted to get bait for my fishing-rod. Where are you going to?” — Rangatágĕl said, “I only came to look for my goleáol”. — Then both realized that they had the same stone and Rangém shouted at once, “Go away!” — However, when Rangatágĕl did not want to budge, he shouted again, “Go, otherwise I am going to kill you!” — Yet, Rangatágĕl did not yield, whereupon, Rangém said, “You are brave, be my friend!” — Thus they decided to find a solution based on their friendship. Rangém said, “Well, we will take our baits, and we will meet again here tomorrow afternoon.” Rangatágĕl agreed and they both met the following afternoon at the golongosóngĕl ²-time at the stone. Rangém invited his friend to come home with him and to spend the night there, to find out if his wife was treating him well. Rangatágĕl agreed and, thus, both of them sailed to a Iebúkŭl. When they arrived at home, Rangém said to his wife, “Bring taro and other food for my friend”. She did everything nicely, and in a friendly manner. When they had eaten, Rangatágĕl said, “This is the best taro I ever tasted. Is it not called tatangelél ³”? Pleased his hosts nodded.

On the following morning, the guest said to Rangém, “Now you come with me to a Imŭl and spend a night with me”. — He agreed and they sailed across to a Imelĭk. However, when they were still far from the house, they met Rangatágĕl’s wife, who shouted, “What a fool my husband is. He brings people, whom I probably have to feed”. When they reached the house, she was still mumbling some words. Rangatágĕl said, “Don’t be angry, I brought a friend, who will eat with us and who will stay over night. Bring taro and other foods”. — Then she brought taro, placed it in front of Rangém, who said, after he had eaten some, “This taro is excellent, I think it is called bangedákl”. —After their meal Rangém said to his friend: “Let us work together, in order to earn some money”. Rangatágĕl agreed, and the next day he took away his wife’s money, which she had guarded. He went with Rangém to a Iebúkŭl. There, they decided to make a mesekiú l miĕg, an “almond fish”, in order to sell it. When it was finished it, they brought it to Goikŭl, where rubak II Gad r deĭ wanted to have it. He gave both of them one piece of kluk-money, but soon afterwards he regretted it. He tried to get his money back, without having to return the food, and therefore, he entrusted his sister Dira tkelgáng ⁴ to try it.

¹ Such stones with cavities are called goleáol; usually octopi bukitáng live in the cavities.

² cca. one hour before sunset, when the palm-wine-cutters go about their work.

³ tatangelél (obviously from tatĕngel) to be successful in luck and love. The opposite is bangedákl, not to be successful.

⁴ This woman is well known as a love-teacher, receiving food as presents for it. See log. Bai 37 IIIb.

She said, “Very well, then you have to arrange for both of them to sleep tonight in the blai”. — Following Gad r deī’s invitation both of them stayed over night. When night fell, she ate alone, and then said to her brother, “Gad r deī, you eat with both of them, while I am leaving”. — This she did. However, she went outside and in the darkness she lay down on the porch, next to the door, where both of them always sat.

She had given the order to light the clay lamp in such a fashion, that she and her two guests were in the shadow. When everything developed according to her plan, she secretly put her hand inside the house and grabbed Rangatágēl’s manhood, which she held tight, while whispering to him to come outside to meet her. Since he could no longer eat in peace, he got up and went outside. She was waiting for him and took him to a nearby bush, where she gave herself to him. Afterwards, she said to him, “Gad r deī is too poor, he cannot pay for the almond-fish.” — Now Rangatágēl realized her plan and replied, “Oh, I will give you back the kluk and one additional piece of money. — Then he gave her not only the kluk, but also one additional klsuk-piece and also gave her the mongongāu-piece of money, called Melíl a miĕg “Shriveled Leaf Of The Almond Tree”, which he taken away from his wife. Rangém did not notice any of this. Only the following morning, when both were sailing in their canoe, he told him what had happened. Then Rangém said, “Very well, when you liked it, then it is all right. I will gladly give away the almond-fish”.

Story 134b. The Clever Women Of Goikúl.

(The Canoe About Love)

log.: bai 40 V^a, bai 51 III^a, bai 52 III^b illustr. d.-pl. 18^f, bai 110 II^b, bai 133 VIII.

Once upon a time, a women’s club from Goikúl visited Reblūd, rubak I of Galĕgúi. They had the plan to ask him for a war canoe, offering their favours in exchange. Yet, the women of Nggamaséd had come with the same intention. When these women pestered him, he invited them to try the canoe, which they did. After their return, the Goikúl-women likewise made an attempt, but they did not come back, instead they went home with the canoe, of course with his consent. When the women of Nggamaséd reproached him because of this, he merely said, “Why are you coming back?” thus, he had tricked them.

Story 135a. The Mean Gadlulóu.

log.: bai 64 IV^b.

Once upon a time, Gadlulóu from Ngátpang went to Ngarekeāi in a Imelĭk, in order to watch a dance there. The daughter of rubak I Rungūlbai saw him, when he arrived, and at once, she liked him so much that she said to her father, “Give him money, I want to marry him”! Rungūlbai complied with his daughter’s request and gave Gadlulóu one piece of galebúgĕp-money. Shortly afterwards, they married. Subsequently, Gadlulóu did not treat his wife well in Ngátpang, he made her ugly with the help of bad medicine. Wounds broke out and she got sick. Another man took pity on her, gave her good medicine, and healed her. He also took her away to her home village and returned her to her father.

Story 135b. Why The Bad Always Sits On Top.

log.: bai 133 III^a illustr. d.-pl. 19^a.

In Ngaragamér, a women was pregnant with 2 children, and she gave birth to the »bad tempered« son, Mékngit réng, and to the “good-natured” daughter Úngilréng. As often as the brother came back from fishing, he put the fish at the bottom of the basket and the sea urchins on top, causing his sister to prick her fingers. The mother and her son always ate the best. One day, when Mékngit réng came again back from fishing, Úngilréng said, “I am afraid because of my brother’s basket”. When the mother saw her daughter trembling, she opened her mouth and Úngilréng went inside. When the brother entered the house, he asked for his sister. The mother said, she did not know where she was.

Enraged the son shouted, “If you don’t tell me I will spear you”. — Then she betrayed her daughter’s hiding place. At once the son demanded that she opened her mouth, and when she had complied with his request, he took the same way. Since it was already full inside, he remained on top, and therefore, the bad always remains on top and comes quickly, but the good only comes slowly.

Story 136a. Debedébĕk And a Ltalátk.

log.: bai 4 V^a, bai 5 VII^a illustr. d.-pl. 19^a, bai 49 I.

“To Think And To remember”, because he thought (melebedébĕk) of her on the way and she remembered (melátk) him. It was like this: the boy Debedébĕk and the girl a Ltalátk where children of the bamboo Lild in Ngarsúng¹. They only got almonds to eat. One day, the siblings wandered away from home, to the north in the direction towards a Imelĭk. Soon they reached a fork in the road. Debedébĕk said, “Go to the right, I will go to the left, in case something happens to us, then only one will be affected”. The girl took her brother’s advice and after she had followed the right path for a while, she arrived in Ngátpang. Rubak a Irókl from Ngardúbög sat at the head of the stone path. As soon as he saw the pretty Ltalátk, he took her as his wife. Debedébĕk, though, arrived in Ngarekeāi. Rubak I Rungūlbai called to him, “Where are you going to?”— The young man replied, “I travel around and wherever people welcome me, there I will stay.”

— Then Rungūlbai asked him to stay with him, and soon he was so much beloved that the daughter wanted to marry the stranger, whereupon he moved with her into the telegeiĕr-bai. One day, a dance took place in Ngarekeāi. When the moment came for him to pay his *górau*²-money, he first locked himself in and then told his wife he had to leave for the savanah. Once he arrived there, he followed the path his sister had taken, to see where she was and how she was doing. When he arrived in Ngátpang, he went to the village Ngardúbög. Straight away, he called at his sister. He went to her house and a Irókl immediately knew that this was her brother, because of his similarity with his sister. Answering the rubak’s questions, Debedébĕk reported what had happened. Replying to the question why he had come, the young man told the reason for having left Ngarekeāi. He asked his brother-in-law if he could give him a klevĕgĕlbúóg. However, Irókl replied, “You have to have a górau. Drink and eat, the two of us we will come on the right day”.

— When Debedébĕk returned home, his wife asked him: What did you do on the savanah? — He answered: I just amused myself. — On the day of the ruk-dance, a Irókl came to Rungūlbai and said: You have to give me one good kluk as gongráol. — With the consent of his relatives Rungūlbai handed it over, whereupon a Irókl gave Rungūlbai one galebúgĕp for the dance, then he paid one bágĕl as a bus-marriage present for his brother-in-law. Rungūlbai gave half a bágĕl back. Afterwards, a Irókl paid some smaller pieces of money as vok for Debedébĕk. When they took farewell he said: Don’t treat my brother-in-law like your slave, since I paid for everything. — Thereupon, he returned with his wife to Ngardúbög. From now on, Debedébĕk lived in splendor and with joy.

Story 136b. The Birds Of The gongáiĕr-Tree.

(Sent by WILLIAM GIBBON, Sept. 1924.)

A gongáiĕr-tree in Ngaragamér was loaded with fruits. Therefore, the birds in this area held a meeting and distributed the fruits among themselves. The laib-pigeon received the top of the tree. Soon the fruits ripened in the sections of the birds, only the fruits of laib on top remained green, therefore, it waited. It waited and waited, until the next ripening season. Once again, the lower branches of the tree bore fruits, again the birds came together and ate their share, but the laib-pigeon had to wait for a second time, because her fruits on top of the tree were still not ripe. It went on like this until the fourth time of maturity.

¹ After a gérabai it is the rat bĕap re ngurumkáis, which lives underneath a pandanus. Children of the bamboo, see story 15.

² The górau-present is one piece of kluk-money, the klevĕgĕlbúóg-donation is one kldait; gongraol is half a górau.

When all the birds saw that laib was still waiting, they asked it, if these were still the fruits of the first season. It confirmed this. Then they said to it: You are our friend, which is waiting for the green gongaïër fruits. Therefore the proverb: kau e ra mangîl a gamádăg ungăër. You are waiting for the unripe gongáer.

Story 137. Tur‘re Ngeráod “The Bundle Of Ngeráod:.

log.: especially of Tekiël maláp and the gaild-place Ngeráod:

bai 7 II^b, bai 10 IV^b, bai 13 VII^a, bai 16 IV^b, bai 17 V^a, bai 18 I, bai 34 III^b, bai 52 II^a illustr. d.-pl. 19^d, bai 55 V^a illustr. d.-pl. 19^b, bai 62 III^b illustr. d.-pl. 19^c, bai 114 IV^b illustr. d.-pl. 30^f, about the calophyllum-tree see A. B. MEYER ’81 pl. 2, row I (a. pl. 4 row 4 galid).

Ngeráod is a hill with two summits ¹ covered by forests. It is situated in the southern part of Babldáob, north of a Iraĩ. People say it belonged to heaven, since supernatural beings, galid spirit, lived there in a beautiful bai of the telegeĩër-kind. Tekiël māláp, man-eating devils, also belong to this galid spirit, who carry on their evil practices in the mountain forests, catching souls, in order to eat them, etc. Once upon a time, 9 such demons always came at night to Ngertúkër, the channel of a Imül, on the west coast of the island, in order to catch with their nets the souls of the dead and to eat them. They always wore the heads of owls, so they could not be recognized. They took a canoe from the local canoe house to fish with it in the lagoon.

In the morning, when the owner saw the vehicle wet and covered with fish scales, he asked his neighbors who was always stealing his canoe. But nobody could provide any information. Then he thought it had to be some galid spirit, and he decided to catch them. In order not to deter them by human smell, he took two small pieces of coconut kernel, roasted them over a fire, and put them into his ears. In this fashion, he went down to the channel in the evening and lay down on the bottom of his canoe. It did not take too long and he heard some noise. He remained laying still and did not move. The Tekiël māláp soon smelled the odor of the ulongóug, the burnt coconut. Following it, they found the man lying in the canoe. Although he had prepared himself, he was still terribly shocked about the devil’s appearance. Instantaneously, he offered them the roasted small coconut pieces, which pleased them very much.

Thus the man and the Tekiël māláp became friends and went fishing together. Back on shore, their rich catch was divided. Before the boogeymen turned on their heels to go home, they asked their friend whether he still had some more roasted nut. He invited them to come with him to his blai, where he took down some coconuts from the horizontal beams, which still were in their dry husk. He set these on fire, so that the kernel inside was roasted. Finally he peeled it and gave it to his galid spirit -friends. At once, they greedily devoured their favorite dish. Then they invited the man to come with them and to also sample some of their food. He consented and they marched off. “Always step into our footsteps,” they shouted to him, since their way led them not over the earth but through the sky. He did as he was told, and thus, they arrived in no time at all in Ngeraod. First they came to a tall calophyllum-tree that split in the middle for the arrivals and, once they had passed through, it closed again ².

Thereupon, the Tekiël māláp told the man, “When we come into the house of our old mother and we offer you something, do not accept anything, except what is in the taro-cupboard, this do accept!”³ Soon they reached the house of their mother, who was a large woman with huge breasts. They had a good time there. After two days, the Tekiël māláp wanted to give their friend a present. The old woman offered him a turtle shell plate, which had the characteristic to fill again and again, if it was turned once around itself ⁴, yet he refused.

¹ see map 3, width 23’ 30

²After a gerabai it is the rat bĕap re ngurumkáis, which lives underneath a pandanus. Children of the bamboo, see story 15.

³Compare with story 10 and 61 about Ngirakloultaög.

⁴see story 52.

Thereafter, the old woman asked him, whether he wanted to have the money-incubating chicken, the famous Malk ra ngĕráod, which had a human head, yet, he also did not want to have this one. When she finally wanted to know what he actually wanted to have, he said, “I want to own what is rattling in the taro-cupboard! “Good”, said the women. When he was about to return home, the Tekiël māláp took out a bundle and gave it to him with the advice, to clasp it with his hand. It was a blabuk-piece of the sacred garamál-tree, the hibiscus tiliaceus ¹ that was rolled into the leaf blade of an areca palm; it was the bundle Tur‘rengeráod. The man held on to the bundle, when they brought him to the calophyllum-tree, which opened and closed again. Outside, he held the bundle in front of his breast and then he stretched out on it, just as he had been told. He had hardly lain down and closed his eyes, when he was already flying through the air and just a few minutes later he was in a Imül, in front of his house. He went inside and hid the bundle in his taro-cupboard.

A few days later, a child, the small son of rubak I Sagaraimül got very sick. The man was just sitting on the chiefs’ stone platform close to blai Terékĕd, when several women with pots on their heads passed by. He asked them where they were going to and they answered, they were bringing water, in order to wash Sagaraimül’s dying child, who would probably be dead by tomorrow.

Then he only shouted the following words: audögul magĕüid ². When the women came to Sagaraimül, they at once told him about their adventure and the words. Then the chief asked the man to come to him. This one first went to fetch his bundle and then went with it into the death house, where the child died, while the guest made himself a betel nut chew. Everyone present began to mourn and Sagaraimül said to the man, “The child is dead! If you can help me I will give you money, one galebügĕp and one bágĕl!” “Very well”, the man replied, he took the Tur‘rengĕráod, and placed it on the chest of the child, whereupon it awoke at once. Then he took the money from the happy father, went home, and once again hid the bundle. Quickly the rumor about this incident spread in Ngarekeaĩ and people came to his house with the intention to take away his treasure. He put them off until later, then he would give it to them.

This satisfied people momentarily, but soon afterwards, when he had left with spear and basket to go fishing, he saw smoke rising in a Imül and he guessed that it was his house. Quickly, he hurried home to the fire and really found his house in flames. Yet, on top of the house rack he saw the garamál-piece and it called out to him, “Don’t cry, I am here!” Quickly he grabbed it and saved it, shouting to the culprits, “Here is the piece! If you are clever you leave it to me, for the sake of our lives! In case you continue to pressure me, I will throw it into the bush so that it will grow into a garamál-tree!” They, however, did not leave him alone and he finally did what he had threatened to do. Thus, now all people have to die, while the garamál-tree is immortal.

Story 138. The Badly Mannered Money-Drillers of Ngeráod.

log.: bai 6 III^a illustr. d.-pl. 19^c, bai 78 II^a, bai 97 w., bai 99 VIII, bai 103 VIII illustr., bai 105 II^b, bai 114 IV^b, bai 115 X^b a. XII^a.

A group of spirits from Ngeráod wanted to drill some money, but they did not tell the galid spirit. So they ruined the pieces of money and they broke. When they asked him, how it was properly done, he replied: goturek ma gongól, gom lĕi? begging and crying, now you are coming?

Then he showed them. These creatures, which want to do like the galid spirit, are called rubagád ³ ě Ngeráod, the “Ladder Of Ngeráod”. They can also bless and curse effectively. The like can also be found in the other villages, especially old people and chiefs, who are called rubagadengĕl a pelú. Those of a blai are also called like this.

¹ Hibicus tiliaceus. The wood is very light.

² see story 14 a.

³ plur. of Gobagad.

Story 139. Ngiragaramëu And Ngiramangés From a Iraĩ

log.: bai 103 w.

Ngiragaramëu and Ngiramangés from a Iraĩ sailed to a Imelík, in order to collect outstanding debts. The club Ngaratogadí from a Iraĩ followed them and because he was killing people out of willfulness, both of them were attacked by the irritated people. Ngirmangés was speared and Ngiragaramëu was only saved from certain death by the high chief Rungūlbai’s intervention, and he returned to a Iraĩ. The body of the first one was dragged to Ngarekamais, the pier of Goréör.

Story 140. Malk ra Bések, The Poor And The Rich Rooster.

log.: bai 4 III^a, bai 13 VI^b, bai 22 VI^a, bai 23 I, bai 34 I, bai 62 VI^a illustr. d.-pl. 19^f, bai 72 II^b, bai 82 I, bai 87 II^b, bai 94 I, bai 99 IV^a, bai 103 IV^b, bai 114 II^a, bai 120 III^a, bai 128 V II^a, bai 129 III^b, bai 151 VIII

Right next to Goikúl is the mountain Rois ra Bések, on which once lived a poor rooster. One day, he heard another rooster crow and responded diligently. The second rooster lived not far away on the spirit mountain Ngeráod. It is well known as the rich one with the human head, the rooster which incubates money and which gave that legendary mountain the reputation of immeasurable riches. Its comb supposedly was made of galebúgěp-money pieces. When Malk ra Ngeráod always received replies to its crowing, it got very angry and decided to find the culprit and to punish it. It ordered its servants to prepare good food for the journey. He himself carried a basket filled with a lot of money and a long stick, at the tip of which hung a tortoise shell plate. Thus, they wandered up and down for a long time until they reached Rois ra Bések. When the Ngeráod-rooster saw his adversary, he shouted: Why do you crow all the time, do you want to annoy me? Are you wealthier than I? — Then the culprit replied: No, on the contrary, I wanted to attract your pity, because I am poor. See, nothing is growing in my place and I am going hungry! —Moved the wealthy rooster gave the poor one a taro patch, all the money it carried with him, and the food the servants carried. Then he returned to Ngeráod.

Story 141. Ngisél sogósög “The Egg Of The White Seagull” (Chain Of Eggs)

log.: bai 95 II^b, bai 105 III^a, bai 110 IV^a, bai 119 VII^a illustr. d.-pl. 20^a, bai 151 II^b, bai 152 II^b, see Vol. 1.

The chiefs of a Luáng —Goikúl had the habit to sail to their former home on Ngurukdápěl, in order to collect the eggs of sea birds there on a cliff, called marág ra Ngaláls. One day, it happened that they discovered at the bottom of a wall the nest of a white gygis-seagull with one egg. Since they did not have a rope to climb down, they decided to form a chain, by holding each others hands ¹, the kaiuarékéd gem. Rubak III Rengūl held on to a kesīl-cedar bay cherry tree standing on the top. He ordered the others, one after the other, to climb down. When Rengáis, rubak I, was the one furthest down, Rengūl thought that this was a good moment for his advancement. He shouted to Rengáis, “I am going to let go, if you do not tell me something nice!” Fearing certain death, this one replied, “Don’t loosen the grip, you shall be the first one, in front of me!” Rengáis brought up the egg and it turned out that it was a piece of galebúgěp-money, called Ngisél a sogósög. Nobody knows where it went to. Rengáis stepped down from first place and became rubak IV, behind Rengūl III. Besides, even today, when food or money is distributed, this one still receives the best piece.

Story 142. Berípěr And Gamarėdóng In The Double-Cave Of Goikúl ².

log.: bai 1 illustr. d.-pl. 20^a, bai 6 IV^a, see also A. B. MEYER ’81, plate 4, row 12.

Berípěr and Gamarėdóng were 2 men from Goikúl. The first one was very skillful at cutting palm wine, the other one at the preparation of uósóg-fish-extract.

¹ This is widely used. As for instance, in the chronicles Derer von Zimmern (Langewiesche p. 73) about the farmers from Gaienhofen: “Once they had measured a well; for this reason some of them descended into the well, while one was hanging onto the other. Yet, the one on top spit into his hands, in order hold them better, so that all of them fell into the well.”

² see illustr. 38 in Vol. 2, but it is so shallow, that it would have been impossible to remain undetected, thus, it is a legendary account or it has to be another cave.

Without knowing it, both lived in caves next to each other, since it was at the earliest time, when darkness was prevalent on earth. Each one of them had too much of his product, so that he had to throw away some of it. One day, they heard about each other and realized that their caves were only separated by one wall. They got kikói-shells and scraped through the separating wall, so that they could now share their abundance.

Story 143. The Destruction Of Goikúl.

a) Introduction according to a Polish manuscript, written by KUBARY, from Warsaw that was translated in Hamburg (see KUB. IX).

In the old days, a boy and a girl, siblings, sailed from Goikúl, then still situated on a high lime rock of Ngurukdápěl, to the nearby reef, to collect stuff from the sea to eat. However, they only found one kim-tridacna shell, with which they sailed home. Suddenly a canoe under full sails appeared from behind the rock and was sailing straight towards them. On the basis of the law of Gamasiógěl they took away the meat parts of the shell as gokosóděl. They killed the boy, because he had not immediately responded to their first challenge, and they sent the girl home with the empty shell. In tears, she took along her brother’s body, and buried him. Some time passed, but she never forgot the crime. One day, she left and traveled to Ngarekobásáng, where she became mongol in a bai. One day, when the lagoon between Ngarekobásang and Goréör was again dry, she walked over to this island. On the pier of Ngarekamais she met the old, white haired high chief a Ibědul, who was just peeling the husk from a coconut, in order to produce fibers to twine some string. As soon as the old man saw the pretty, young girl, desire rose in him, and he took her home and made her his wife. (see also story 8 about a Ugélkeklaū)

Story 143b. My Own Recording (Continuation).

(KUBARY’S rendition of this part is incomplete and not correct).

In the old days, Goikúl belonged to Ngaláls and was situated in the Gogeál, next to the islands of a Mototói; a Luáng was part of it. Gebil II from there was married to the Rubasásăg of Goréör, a Ibědul ra mangángěd. One day, he ordered his clan from blai VII a Ingeáol to prepare some beúm̃k, good smelling scraped coconut, for the return of his wife to Ngaláls ¹. When they had left together Goréör, sailing south on board of their kaberúðg-canoe, they landed at the creek a Ideraū next to a Itáp on Ngarekobasáng, in order to wash themselves with it. Gėbil decided to kill Rubăsăg ², and, in order to make him sleepy, she deloused him and rubbed coconut oil on his body. After he had fallen asleep, she took a súmēs-taro stick stuck it into his ear and hammered it in with the help of a baste-pounder, so that the chief died immediately. With the kim-shell she cut off his left hand so that the dugong bracelet was still on it. She placed it into a syrup-water container (a ilėngěl) and put the big bláol-sea cucumber on top.

Then, she ordered her people to land in Ngaláls and to return at once to Goréör, to deliver the container in the rubak-bai Meketí, and to return quickly. When the rubak of Meketí found the delivery, the rubak shouted: a Ibědul is dead! They were very enraged and decided to destroy Goikúl. In those days, a Iegád ra ugúp from a Imelík ³ was married in Goikúl. They told him: Celebrate a large feast there. We will help you out with food. Help us in return. He agreed and prepared a long rope to hang it from the village down the cliff. Then the mur-feast started and lasted 3 days and 3 nights. After the oategútũm- dance on the ground had ended, the worn out participants of the feast fell asleep. Now he dropped the rope down the rock cliff marág re Nggús and fastened it on top. Tugging at it, he noticed someone already hanging on it at the bottom, he pulled him up, then all the others. As the last man reached the top, morning was breaking. Then they slew the sleepers with their clubs, and only few could escape, who reached today’s Goikúl. Yet even here, people from the Ngarabesék of those days did not want them, therefore, most of them jumped from the rock Goidíl and perished.

¹ KUB.: One of the husband’s main responsibilities is to visit, together with his young wife, her family and to bring presents.

² She was determined to revenge her brother.

³ KUB.: a relative, rubak IV Klotráol.

The only survivor was one woman, who founded blai ra bars in Madál.

c) Continuation from KUBARY’S Manuscript:
(see also KUB. V p. 38 at Ngardmau and Nggësar)

A woman lived on the rock of Ngaláls. One day, she found a young gogáio-Tropical shearwater ¹, she took care of it, and raised it. To show its gratitude, it flew every day over the ocean and brought the woman fish. Yet one day, when it returned, he found the place destroyed. In vain, it waited for its foster-mother and, therefore, decided to look for her. It flew around everywhere, but could not find her. Once, when he flew over the coast Ugarbeszek ², it spotted a bent old woman shaking taro leaves in front of her house. When she saw the bird, she thought of the lost child and welcomed it with a chant. Then, it recognized her as its foster-mother and crying, “mother, mother, dearest”, it flew to her; she warmly hugged it and happily caressed it. From that time on, it stayed with her. Moved by this event, the people of Nggësár immortalized this faithful, child-like love by honoring and venerating the bird and regarding it as sacred, even today. The chant, about which KUB. V, p. 38 reports, is in the manuscript like this (in new orthography):

gogáio di garmék a metúkër a lkr a Ngaláls Tropical shearwater, my animal from the bay outside of Ngaláls
e komlargër ma kom di komés re ngak a togedir a luáng, e gëlgól Kapkal kedí melódël ³
Where do you come from, and ,only you look at me at the headland of Iuang, on the beach of Kapkal, you, who are barren?

Song

úngil a gelsél a búiel, akubá derĩr lmánga a demok iríkl beautiful right in the middle is the moon, I am holding (a) spoon to eat the Demók taro dessert outside;
*e mangal‘lákl a gogáio ngarapëbúl a*Ngarabesék, there hovered a puffinus over Ngarabesék,
e ma di oureng e dil mángël ma melál which she was longing for: the woman cries and sings.

Story 144. The Toeless Female Thief.

log.: bai 30 III^b illustr.

Once it happened that Diragëlségël ⁴, a toeless woman in Goikúl, stole some taro from a plantation. The theft was detected and with the help of the footprints the woman was detected as the thief. Now the women of Goikúl took advantage of this, they tied their toes into taro leaves and in this fashion went busily stealing taro. However, the son took his mother, together with her belongings, into a cave. When she was subsequently accused of all these thefts, her son said: You are lying, she is living in the cave! — He then brought her out of there, and now everyone knew that she had stolen only once and that the others had done so on the other occasions.

Story 145. The Missed Sting Ray.

log.: bai 30 V^a illustr. d.-pl. 21^e.

A couple and their two sons sailed with their canoe from Nggësár to a Iraĩ. At the end of the mangrove channel, on the south side of Goikúl, at the place a Tngabárd, the son Ngerdék saw a stingray and said to his mother: Prepare a piece of taro for our father, here is a stingray, he can eat the liver of the fish with it! — On Palau people traditionally ate this one raw. Where is the stingray? shouted the mother.

¹ KUB. Kokayu; Puffinus sp.

² KUB. writes also Ngar beschtschk in the empire Kapkal, this can only mean Ngarabések (see story 140). In KUB. V it supposedly was about Nggësár.

³ actually to take off, for instance clothes (WALL).

⁴ see story 157, footnote.

There, replied the son and threw the spear, but missed. Olokói, shouted Ngerdék! However, the father was rather angry because of this and the older brother looked the other way.

Story 146. How The Badly Treated Matageiaũ ¹ Took Revenge.

While fishing on the reef, Matageiaũ from Ngarsúng got many mussels and snails, and he brought them home just as he had found them. His family said, why do you bring everything in shells, could you not remove the meat? Do the shells have to be kept? — He only replied: I want to build a food-platform, a gólbed ë kal. At night Matageiaũ wanted to get close to his wife, yet, she said: Go away, tomorrow morning I want to plant my taro shoots! — This angered him very much.

The following morning, he took one banana shoot and planted it at the edge of his compound, though, without telling his wife about it. After some time, the banana had grown and had produced a beautiful blossom, while his wife’s taro did not grow too well. Then he said to her: When the banana is ripe, we are going to celebrate a feast, inviting the rubak of Ngarsúng and Ngurusár to eat the banana with us. — He had the plan to shame his wife. When the appropriate time had come and the rubak appeared, he ordered his wife to fetch her taro and to display it on the benches. She, however, remarked: My Taro is too small and bad, people will only laugh at me. — He, however, replied: The pieces are quite good, just put them there. — Thus, she displayed the taro on the benches. After everything was ready, the rubak came to get the taro from the racks. However, when they saw it, they considered it ulekiaĩ, food unfit even for medicinal consumption. Finally they took and laughed. Then Matageiaũ stood up, in front of his guests he said that this was the kind of taro originating from his wife’s refusal to sleep with him. His wife wept and was ashamed. Matageiaũ, though, had managed a better treatment in the future.

Story 147. Mareáos from Ngëruluóbël.

log.: bai 104 V^b.

Mareáos and Tóngot and a Góitablaĩ sailed with their canoes to a Imeúngs, in order to kidnap a mongol. Mareáos’ canoe got stuck on a rock. He slipped into the village and from there into the taro patch, where he found the mongol a Usebék. People, however, noticed him and he had to flee. His canoe that had gotten stuck was destroyed and with difficulties he returned to his friends, who had been waiting for him anxiously. He had to atone for the offense.

Story 148. The Talking Head Of Galid spirit Madatumlógët.

log.: bai 4 IV^b d.-pl. 20^e, bai 8 IV^a illustr. d.-pl. 20^b le^ñ a. frott., bai 23 III^a illustr. d.-pl. 20^b le^ñ a. III^b illustr. d.-pl. 20^d, bai 27 II^a a. II^billustr. d.-pl. 20^e, bai 76 V^a, bai 83 IV^b, bai 107 VI^b, bai 128 VII^b, bai 140 VIII.

A galid spirit by the name of Madatumlógët lived in form of a turtle in a cave on the gogeál island Ngëlíł ² nearby a Iraĩ. One day, rubak I Tugërëmél from Ngurusár ³ was cooking palm wine into syrup there, when he saw the animal in its hiding place. He called his fellow villagers and they made a large net, placed it in front of the cave’s exit, and managed to catch the turtle, together with the ngerenél‘lë gölú ⁴, the echo-man, who escaped to the gogeal islands. They brought it on shore, butchered it, and boiled it for the feast the new chief gave for the rubak of Pélau. The head was in a special pot, next to which sat a girl. She had tears in her eyes, because of the smoke drifting into her face. Then the head started talking and asked: Why are you crying? — The girl replied: Because of your head. — Then this one said: Very well, when the other are eating me, don’t do so. — When the head was cooked, a rubak from Goréör came in order to divide it. However, the head talked: What do you want? Rubak, go away!

¹ Name rubak VIII in Ngarengasáng.

² More detailed information about the place is not known; according to some other information it was the island ng Kesil’l.

³ according to some other information it was rub. I Segasabál of the deserted place aléläg, in the vicinity of Ngurusár.

⁴ ngerengël le chelú echo WALL.; meaning “Voice Of The Turtle” (SAM. volu turtle) ngorr (poss. ngereíl) voice

—The same happened with the rubak of Melekéoik and of all the other places, who tried the division. Only the one from Mangal‘lang was successful. He shouted: Close your eyes, I want to cut! — He quickly started cutting. Therefore, at large feasts, where all Palau is participating, the rubak of Mangal‘lang has still today the privilege to carve the meat and he receives the head of the pig, etc. Whereas everyone, who ate from the turtle perished, the girl survived and also received the turtle shell, of which there are still some tortoise shell plates existing, as for instance the Uerengalílin Goréör.

Story 149a. How The Cripple Kelulau Was Healed.

log.: bai 36 V^a, bai 94 IV^d illustr.

In a village (Ngurusár?), there lived a woman together with her two sons, one of whom was a cripple. The healthy brother wanted to heal him an asked a friend of his brother to bring him to Pelú ra geimongerél ¹, the “Land With A Mouth”. Thus, he cut a lot of palm wine, collected coconuts, and loaded everything on board of a raft, which had been made ready for the trip. When both of them were on board, he released it and it drifted to Pelu geimongerél, where he threw the cripple on top of a goáläg-sea urchin. The shock was so profound that he stretched all his limbs.

Story 149b. The Wonder-Working Dilukai of Ngurusár.

log.: bai 128 VI^b illustr. d.-pl. 20^d.

Whenever someone ² gets sick in a Ulimáng or when the taro patches have a poor yield, then the local women make a klegadaol delegation to Ngurusár and they hang their piece of Mogugú-money (Ngitoái), one br‘rak, around the abdomen of the dilukai-figure of the rubak-bai, and stay 3 days. In similar situations Ngurusár does the same in Ulimáng.

Story 150. Ngartág a bëeap,

The Anchorage On The Northern Side Of Goréör.

log.: bai 5 V^a, bai 69 VIII^a illustr. part-vol. 5 illustr. 10, bai 70 III^b, bai 77 V^b, bai 86 V^b, bai 92 V^a, bai 104 IV^a, (bai 115 III^b), bai 122 VI illustr. d.-pl.20^e, bai 138 V^b.

All bëap-rats of Palau had gathered in Ngaregolóng ³. They ate pots of meat and fish, called klongóiës, etc. However, they left the so-called ngaliókl-pots, filled with taro and other vegetables, untouched. One of the leaders of the rats, called Kamángël bëeap ⁴ lifted the lid of the pot and when he saw the many fish, he said: Go ahead and eat, but leave the eyes for me. However, his fellow rats did not follow his order and ate everything to the last bit. When everything had been eaten, the group turned to Ngarárd, then to Ngardmau, then to Ngaram lungúi and further on to a Imelik. Everywhere the rats behaved in the same manner. They emptied all the meat pots and did not leave anything for Kamángël bëeap, despite his admonitions. He became so angry about the behavior, that he told the black lizard ngerengél‘lë gôlú ⁵, it should order the Red snapper kedësau to come, together with his family, at the time of full moon to the surface of the water, because then many rats would come to the sea and they should eat all of them, except the long one.

The lizard told the tele builitótog-fish, to relate it to the kedësau, which is still today considered to be a rat eater among Palauans. Just recently, when opening such a fish, people supposedly found a rat inside. When the full moon was approaching, the leader Kamángël bëeap told the rats to take half coconut shells with holes in it so that they could stick their tails through and row with them.

¹ see story 153.

² especially rub. I Bagés.

³ According to another information it was only a club Ngaratémring from Ngaragamér.

⁴ WALL. omángl to trick, to mock.

⁵ = echo, see story 148.

All but a few did this and when ordered went into the ocean. However, when they were on the wide stretch of water in-between a Imelik and Goréör, schools of kedësau-fish came and ate all the rats except Kamángël.

Therefore, the water is called Ngartág a bëap. Thus, the leader arrived alone on Goréör and ate all the fish pots there. When the remaining rats, which still existed, heard about this, they got together and chased Kamángël to the east, up the coast of Babldáob to Galáp, then west to Ngúrang, where he hid and rested underneath a wooden bowl. However, when he came to Ngarapelík, they found him again and chased him to Pkul a bëap ¹, where they caught and killed him.

Story 151. The Wounded In Behind.

In the old days, whenever a man had been speared into the chest, he was turned upside down, so that the blood would flow out. In Ngaregamaï it happened to a warrior that he was hit in the buttocks during the battle against Melekéiok. He was ashamed because of this, and when they returned home, he remained sitting in the canoe, until a friend of his came on board and brought a mat to cover him. He put it around himself. Yet, when he stepped on shore, it fell down, so that all saw his injury and laughed at him.

Story 152. Gókau, The Piece Of Money From Ngeritáng.

When Ngeritáng on Ngarekobasáng was taken over, rubak V Klotráol of Goréör captured the piece of money Gókau, yet later on, he passed it on to Gámliangël on Pelíliou. Rubak VII, Rubásäg, did not know about the further exchange. One day, he wanted to see the piece of money, then Klotráol said he had lost it. Later on, he revealed what had really happened and told him his plan to get it back.

Soon afterwards, he got his canoe ready to sail to Pelíliou and he sent a message to Rubásäg, that he should await his return in Málagal that belonged to the family VII Ngaraingeáol. Rubásäg counted the nights and on the eve of the expected arrival he went to Málagal. He brought along a lot of food for the welcome of the piece of money. The following morning his young relatives climbed on the mountain to see if Klotráol was coming.

When Klotráol arrived in Pelíliou, he pretended to be sick. People from Gámliangël brought him to their place where he complained about pains. Then they asked him why he had come. He said: I only want to see the Gokau then I will be healthy again. — Then they cried: Why did you not say so at first? — They gave him the piece of money and he placed it into his small basket. Then he asked for a coconut husk for cleaning, as he had to go to the toilet. He placed it in such a manner on top of his basket, that one could hardly see it, disappeared, came back, and repeated this trick several times, so that people assumed that he was suffering from diarrhea. The following morning he behaved in the same fashion, yet at the same time, he told his people to have the canoe ready in the channel.

At midday, when he had once again gone outside with the basket covered by the husk, he hurried to the channel, got on board of the canoe and sailed away. People from Gámliangël first waited, then they sent some messengers, who soon learned that a canoe had left. Since they no longer found Klotráol’s canoe in the channel, they realized that the Gokau was lost. When Rubásäg’s people on the mountain Málagal saw the canoe coming around Cape Ngaramedíu, they got everything ready for the feast. However, Klotráol sailed through the Kesebokú-entrance into the harbor, then through the Toágël ra Ngél out of it again and through the entrance Ngeseksau into the Lebúgol channel ².

¹ Vol. 1, map 3 ø 41,5°.

² see Vol. 1, secondary map.

When Rubásǵ realized this, he gave the order to distribute the food of the keblīl, he sailed to Toi rē gúio, and had a tall kesīl-cedar bay cherry tree felled. Therefore, they only arrived at night with the tree in front of the channel that still today is named a Ikesil because of the tree. He actually left it there with the trunk in the ground, as a symbol for his people, who would always see it when they went out fishing. By and by the tree got dry, the leaves and the branches fell off, but the trunk remained strong. Rubásǵ also instituted a sign at his house in a Ingeáol. He made a cut into a stone and waited until moss had grown over it. By that time, the tree stood also barren and Klotráol, still had not contacted him, then Rubásǵ prepared for war. He drove Klotráol away from Getēt and took the title Rekesiváng for his house. However, he did not get the piece of money.

Story 153. How Ngarbagéd Got Strong Because Of a Iliúlog.

Rubak a Iliúlog from Ngarbagéd was old and feeble, but he loved to go fishing. He told his friend to bring baskets filled with food to the channel and the fetch him then, so they could go fishing together. When they were out at sea he had bait put on both of his hooks and then had the line handed to him. Whenever a fish bit, he shouted pull in! This made his companion rather reluctant, and when they were back home, he told about it. When a Iliúog wanted to go again, the same man accompanied him, but most unwillingly. When they were out at sea, a storm started and they drifted to Pelú ra geimongerél ¹, the “Land With One Mouth”.

The local high chief took both of them in as his servants. When he asked about the old man he learned that this one could only talk, but could not work. One day, the chief asked the old man, if he wanted to return home and a Iliúlog said he would. Then the chief made a foot sling and told the old man to climb a palm tree, in order to fetch young coconuts. Surprised this one asked him how he was supposed to do this. Then the chief carried him to the palm, where a Iliúlog tried to climb just with his hands, but his legs did not follow. Finally, with a lot of help, he had arrived at the palm fronds, and he asked again: What am I supposed to do?

— Then Ptelúl shouted: Let go! — So the old man let go, fell down, and stood up again, shaking off the dirt as a strong man. The chief said: I made you strong. Where do you belong? — The old man replied: To Ngarbagéd! — Very well, Ptelúl said, return to your canoe it will sail by itself. Though, when you reach Ngarbagéd, say that only one mouth is there, then it will become a good place! — They reported this at home, whereupon rubak I Melimaráng promoted them to be his speakers and consequently the place grew stronger.

Story 154. Blai Ngaragábál In Ngarbagéd.

Diramangiaû was from blai Ngaragábál, which is still the name of a small copse north of Ngarbagéd on Goréör. One day, she sailed to Ngargēlngáēl, a piece of volcanic Pelau-land situated in the middle of the gogeál-lime rocks² not far away to the southeast. She wanted to gather some leaves to fertilize her taro patch. While she was working there she suddenly heard a child crying. She followed the noise and found in front of a nearby cave a bersóiǵg-boa snake in a fresh water pool. Facing the snake she got really afraid and sat down. The snake asked her, “Where are you going to?” The woman replied, “I heard a child crying and followed the call.” Then the bersóiǵg said, “Let us go into the cave and have a look at it.” The woman went with it and they really found a child, then the snake said, “Take the girl on your lap”. The woman did as she was told, yet, filled with fear and pity she wept. Again the snake asked, “Why are you weeping?” The woman answered, “I am crying, because I am sad that you, the mother of the child, do not take care of it.” Then the snake said, “If you can feed it, then take it. When it is grown up, came back here and show it to me!”

¹ see story 149a.

² see Vol. 1, map 2.

The woman promised to do so, took the child, and brought it to her place Ngaragábál, without caring any more about the fertilizer. At home she first looked for a wet nurse. When she heard the woman of blai IV Meriáng in Ngarbagéd had lost her newborn baby, she went there and, while handing over a turtle shell plate, she presented her request, which was granted. Today, the turtle shell plate is still kept there.

Diramangiaû asked Ngirameriáng, the head of the household, “Do you allow your younger relative ¹ come with me to Ngaragabál, in order to feed my child”? When he consented, the woman accompanied her as a wet nurse. The child grew up and prospered. Diramangiaû took the girl with her to the taro patch and gave her a small plot, called Ngaség, to work on. One day, when she was 6—8 years old, she took her to Ngaragelngáel, in order to show the bersóiǵg-boa snake its daughter. When it saw the girl so well cared for, she said to Diramangiaû, “you may keep the girl as your daughter and the land Ngaragelngáel is also yours”!

Thus, the old woman returned to Ngaragbál with her legitimate daughter, who received the name Túrang ra gelngáēl. She grew into a lovely young woman. At that time, Ngarekobasáng was powering over Goréör and the assembly of chiefs of the last place was planning to send a so-called blolóbol, a group of young women, to the first place. Each rubak was supposed to contribute one mǵngol, one bai-girl. Ngiraikelau, rubak II of Goréör and formerly called Ngiramangiaû, came to Diramangiaû to ask her, if Turang wanted to be his contribution (ruál). She agreed and Turang sailed with the other girls to Ngarekobasáng. When Ngarameketí sent the blolóbol the first food, called gasiâu, Diramangiaû went along from Ngaramesekíu ².

In Ngarekobasáng she turned to the rubak-woman I a Guódēl’lǵágád and she brought her daughter into her blai Gomrekóngēl, where they had a very friendly reception. When the first delivery of food had nearly been eaten, a mur-feast was celebrated in the house of Guódēl, during which the women of the place where dancing on a stage. Yet, a Guódēl did not have a daughter of her own, whom she could have let dance on the stage. Since she had grown fond of Túang and regarded her like her own daughter, she had her learn this dance so that, after her death, Turang would know everything about her blai.

After all 7, for a blolóbol customary, food deliveries had been eaten, the girls returned to Goréör, as soon as the chiefs of Ngarekobasáng had given them their earnings. Only Túrang did not leave. She stayed with the woman a Guódēl, in order to learn for her to dance and to sing the lead-song, ked ra nglóik. Only one girl from a certain high-ranking family could perform as the lead singer. Since both, Diramangiaû and a Guódēl’lǵágád, loved Túrang very much, they decided to become one single family and to install Túrang as their heiress. From then on, the three of them lived in Ngarekobasáng or on Goréör. When a feast was organized in blai Ngiraikelau in Goréör, Túrang was the lead singer and both her mothers went with her.

Thus it happened, that a Ikelau and blai IV Meriáng in Ngarbagéd, which fed Túrang, and blai I Gomrekóngēl in Ngarekobasáng united, and even today, they are still very close, after blai Ngaragábál is since a long time extinct. It actually happened during that dance in Goréör that the high chief a Ibēdul fell in love with Túrang and took her home as his wife. He had a large stone platform built in the honor of blai II and his and Túrang’s sons belonged to the a Ikelau family.

¹ gogalēm

² the channel of Dsekél, on the south side of Goréör

Story 155a. Melogótög a gâu With The Long Penis.

log.: bai 12 VIII, bai 102 V^b, bai 114 VI^a, bai 120 VII^a illustr. d.-pl. 20^e, bai 132 V^a, bai 134 IV^a, bai 136 VI^a, bai 143 IV^a, bai 146 I, bai 148 II^a. VI; see also A.B. MEYER pl. 2, row 4. a. pl. 4, row 2.

A man from Ngarekobasáng, called Melogótög a gâu, had a wife, Ngardíl ekelókol, from Ngarěviki¹ in NgatěIngál. Talking with her son, she used bad language: *Kekamángěł a temingém!*² He shouted: When you say this once more, then you and your husband, the kekamángěł a temingěl, have to leave with the canoe to Ngarekobasáng. She, however did not stop using such indecent words, therefore the son, sent both of them away to the island, just as he had promised. At the same time, Melogótög a gâu’s kirs became so long that he had to stay in Gorěör, from where it pushed across to the wife on Ngarekobasáng, who died because of it.

Story 155b. The Long báok.

log.: bai 123 VII^b, bai 134 VI^b, bai 137 IV^a, bai 141 VIII.

A man and a woman played together in the moonlight, when he told her: You don’t have a báok. Filled with indignation she left and soon afterwards, when she was bathing, she said to her female friends: “Pull my báok out and carry it to the yard of his house so that he can look at it”. This they did. When they arrived with their burden and he saw it, his kirs penis popped out, because now he was convinced.

Story 155c. Adultery In Ngaregamaï. Message by Showing Up.

(this happened around 1860; mesuměg a dmángeěs).log.: bai 103 V^a illustr. d.-pl. 20^f.

Two friends from Ngaregamaï sailed together on their fishing trip to a Ulong. Soon after their arrival, one of them said he had to return home to attend important business. Then the other one got suspicious because of his wife and sailed after him. At home, he saw how his friend had intercourse with his wife. Then he took a long pole and speared both of them through the roof. Afterwards, he returned to a Ulong. Soon thereafter, a canoe with three men on board sailed there to bring the husband the news. They arrived before him. When they told him, that his wife was critically ill, he cried. The woman and her lover died and they are buried together in one grave.

Story 156. The Snake of Ngurukdápěł

(ngúiěs rukdápěł).

log.: bai 22 II^a illustr. d.-pl. 21^a, bai 141 III^a;see also A.B. MEYER ’81 pl. 2, row 10.

Some men from Ngeaur sailed in a canoe to the north. At night, when they were in the area of the gogeál Ngurukdápěł, they spotted a fire and approached it in order to use it. Once they were quite close, they realized terrified it was the glowing red mouth of a snake, which soon devoured one of the men. Then they lit their own fire by twirling sticks with strings and there they heated 4 stones until they were red hot. They threw them into the mouth of the monster. Tortured by pain, the ngúiěs-racer snake subsequently ran away and broke a hole into the rock, which can still be seen today, it is called Teluk a rungúiěs. From here it ran to Babldáob and broke open the channel of Ngurusár, then it fled to Ngarebőkú in Ngivál, where the ked Delóbog arungúiěs reminds one of this incident, then to Ngartúkür, finally it died on the reef Tpardilügěs.

Story 157. Gad ě gadúg Of Ngurukdápěł

(Storyteller: Regetúker in Ngarsúl) log.: bai 36 V III^a illustr. d.-pl. 21^b, bai 68 s.

A woman from Mogoáng, blai IV in Ngaremeténgěł, was a thief, and was called *mungúps*³ on Palau.

¹ also Ngaragerúög in a Imelik is mentioned:

² kekamángěł long, temoi—kirs membrum vir., poss.: temingěl, respectively kersěl; temáng (poss. temungúl) the pounder for coconut fibers (see the fish temungúl), with which the man hammered (melegótog), therefore, his name.

³ Diragasékl, a woman in Gámliangěł (district a Imelik), was also considered mungúps. She had a crippled foot. The women of this village bound their foot in the same fashion, so that their footsteps looked like the ones of Diragasékl, who actually was innocent. The story is very similar to story 144, about the female thief without toes. The woman Diltegógo from Gólei was also known to be a taro-thief, yet, Meregórog bőkú was especially notorious.

Story 157. Gad ě gadúg Of Ngurukdápěł

(Storyteller: Regetúker in Ngarsúl) log.: bai 36 V III^a illustr. d.-pl. 21^b, bai 68 s.

A woman from Mogoáng, blai IV in Ngaremeténgěł, was a thievish, and was called *mungúps*¹ on Palau. She took, whatever she could secretly grab. Her family was very much ashamed because of this and, at low tide, they abandoned her on the reef Ngardi-lügěs. The fisherman Gad ě gadúg rukdápěł had just come from his cave on Ngurukdápěł to the very reef, when he saw the abandoned woman sitting on the coral plates. He asked her: Why are you here? — She answered: My children brought me here. —

Then he asked her, if she wanted to come with him and be his wife; she agreed. So he brought her to his cave on Ngurŭkdápěł. There she lived together with her savior². After some time, she got homesick and wanted to see again her place. He said: Very well, but you will come back, won’t you? — Yes, she replied, I just want to see everything, then I will return. — Well, he said, then I will prepare everything for our trip. — He cut down a kesil-cedar bay cherry tree, lit a fire and burnt the wood. He perforated the pieces of coal and the money he produced in this manner, is known to this very day as bas l kesil. However today, only dark, bad glasses are called like this. He also plucked some fruits from the tekamerír-blue marble tree and perforated them for the same purpose.

When Gad ě gadúg and his wife set off, he took the money with him, as well as a school of terekrik-mackerel fish, which he placed into the trench³ of the channel of Ngaremeténgěł⁴. He stayed some days with his wife at that place. One day, he decided to hold a mur-feast for his wife and ordered taro from more or less all the surrounding villages. He moved the terekrik-fish into a péng-stone weir, where he could spear as many as he wanted, then he let them free. When the feast was over, he paid his debts. For the end of the feast, called gotúl a mur, the “Smoke Of The Feast”, he paid one piece of galebúgěp-money, which he extracted from a tooth from his mouth. This piece still exists today, known as Ungelél a Gad ě gadúg. Thereupon, he got ready for their return trip to Ngurukdápěł. He left the terekrik-mackerel fish behind and build two péng-stone weirs for them. Still today, he is venerated as a galid spirit in Ngaremeténgěł. When people go fishing, they place some burnt coconut kernel into his (ulogóug) shrine, they drive as many fish into the peng-weir as they need, and let the rest out.

Story 158. Gamasiógěł In The Cave With Two Exits.

log.: bai 21 V^a illustr. d.-pl. 21^d(Ngitoai), bai 63 II^b, bai 70 II^a illustr. d.-pl. 20^e, bai 81 III^a, bai 87 V II^a, bai 118 II^a, bai 142 IV^b.

A woman from blai Bedagál in Rois pelú (district Ngaramlungúi) was pregnant and traveled to Peliliou. When she came to the cave of Buikmangai the galid spirit, who lived in the cave, stole her child out of her womb. Instead he filled it with saltwater. In due course, the woman had a miscarriage on Peliliou, meanwhile the child, who had received the name Gamasiógěł, grew quickly up in the cave and got tall and strong. When the mother was on her way back to the north and passed Buikmangai, the young man was already wearing a dugong bracelet. Yet, mother and son did not recognize each other. She did notice his resemblance, but could not find an explanation, until galid spirit Ngirukdápěł, in the shape of an mangerengér-sea krait told her. He gave her a school of terekrik- mackerel fish, which he brought to Ngaremeténgěł⁵. Since she lived inland in Roispelú, she gave the fish to Rŭngŭl ra mogoáng, and she always sent him a request whenever she wanted to have some fish.

¹ Diragasékl, a woman in Gámliangěł (district a Imelik), was also considered mungúps. She had a crippled foot. The women of this village bound their foot in the same fashion, so that their footsteps looked like the ones of Diragasékl, who actually was innocent. The story is very similar to story 144, about the female thief without toes. The woman Diltegógo from Gólei was also known to be a taro-thief, yet, Meregórog bőkú was especially notorious.

² It is said, that Gaděgadúg, being a galid spirit, did not sleep with his wife, but helped himself to her genitals and after using them returned them.

³ a trench-k/ís in the channel.

⁴ see story 158.

⁵ see story 157.

Therefore, the fish in Ngarameténgĕl belong to the house Bedagál in Roispelú, which is extinct today.

People also report about Gamasiógĕl, that his cave Degerengékl had two exits and that when canoes passed by, he first begged for taro on one side as a rubak adorned with a dugong-bracelet, then without the bracelet on the other side. So travelers believed there were two different people. They, however, were also not shy, telling the second beggar they had already given everything to the first one ¹. When he was discovered and pursued, he turned into a stone, situated today on the western side of Bilekélĕk-bai in Goréör. When someone from Goréör meets another one, asking for a gokosódĕl, a travel present, and when this one receives something, but still also takes something else, he usually says, when he is insulted: băgĕrei ng geimála Gamasiógĕl “let it be, this is the hand of Gamasiógĕl”! The same is said about the canoehouse Ngitoaĩ in Ngurusár.

Story 159a. The Cat From a Ulóng.

Once upon a time, a man called Ngiratpáng from a Iebúkŭl on Goréör sailed to a Ulóng, in order to fish there. When rain and wind came, he started to freeze, and therefore, entered a cave and lit a fire. Then a cat came. First he fed it coconut kernel, but when he took a glowing stick to light his tobacco, the cat, obviously believing he wanted to hit it, jumped into his face and hurt him so badly that he died.

Story 159b. The Turtle And The Goat.

log.: bai 54 I, bai 120 IV^a, bai 122 I illustr.: d.-pl. 29^c.

The man Diai from Ngarmid brought a turtle to the beach there. After he had put it down there, he saw Gotoégel chasing a goat and he could not hold himself back to help him. The animal, however, ran into the forest on the Gogeal-rocks and they did not catch it. When Diai came back, the turtle was no longer there. He had set it down on its belly, in order to be able to look closely at its shell. In his haste he had forgotten about it. Now it had run away. He sent out a man with a canoe and a net, but it was in vain. Then the two men had a fight because of what had happened. Something similar happened to Gĕriu from Ngaregamaĩ, who brought a turtle he had caught to the beach. Suddenly he saw his canoe drift away, he swam after it. When he came back the animal had escaped.

Story 160. Kesebökú ra Dengasík

(The Moray Eel From Dengasik, Also Called Tpensik.)

log.: bai 4 VI^a, bai 22 V^b, bai 26 IV^a, bai 35 VII^a, bai 67 III^b illustr. d.-pl. 21^c, bai 69 III^b, bai 113 I, bai 114 VI^b, bai 115 III^a, bai 123 IV^a, bai 126 II^a, bai 143 VI^b, bai 146 V^b, bai 148 I.

In Dengasik, an island in the east of Palau ², there is a channel, in which a big stone is situated. The moray-eel grew up there. It became so large, that it could devour a canoe, leaving for a fishing trip, together with its passengers and it also did so from time to time. All people in the neighborhood pondered how they could kill the monster.

Three men, by the name Golĕbú, Golĕbál, and Mogolíkiki sél a supás, tried to do so in the following way: The last one, a younger brother or relative, took the skins galings from the groove of the coconut fronds’ sticks, dried them under the sun to make them limp and withered (moálăg) then they twisted three melisái-strands and finally made with them a rope, to which he fastened a galeákl-hook, a piece of wood ³. A moray-eel served as bait. This snare they placed into the channel and it did not take long, until Kesebokú had devoured it. At once, the three men started pulling on the line, which had been fastened to a palm tree.

¹ In KUB. IX it is written that, the second time, he attacked and robbed the canoe in a rather ugly form. He abducted the women, hit the lamenting passengers, and let them continue their journey without a rudder so that they found their death in the current. See also Goréör, where the legendary stone is standing close to the rubak-bai (see also KUB. I, p. 46 and IX.)

² Probably Ngátik next to Ponape. According to some other information it is an extinct gogeál-place south of Goréör.

³ not galeókl.

They pulled for many hours dragging the fish on shore, where they struck it dead. Afterwards, they cut out the best middle part, brought it into the village, and everyone started to eat. However, it was so much food, that all the villagers could not manage to finish it. The leftovers began to smell, and the maggots became so numerous and large that the inhabitants had to leave their place. They sailed to the west and reached Pelíliou, first they came to Ngerikl, then to Ngatanggâu, where they built a big wall of stones around the local swamp and then filled it with earth. Later on, however, they left this place because of its lack of taro patches. They moved to Ngarengasáng in Ngatĕlngál. Some of the people supposedly also moved to Ngeaur̃.

Story 161. The Galid a Guódĕl ¹,

The Destruction Of Ngardolólok, And The Men’s Club Ngaratatiróu.

log.: bakaĩ-looking for eggs bai 92 IV^a illustr. d.-pl. 31^d.

Galid a Guódĕl came on board of a ship that landed next to Ngaregól on Pelíliou and later on turned into stone. There is the island Ngikúr on the reef that represents the ship. The ship’s crew went on shore and reached Ngarsióu. There, in the form of human beings, lived a Guódĕl and Remád lĕ galid, the sons of the red coconut crab *ketat*², and they fed on gĕgóiōg-crabs. Ngarsióu had the landing place Ngarekĕvékl next to the mountain Gámliangĕl. From there, both of them saw a huge red mass lying in Ngarabeóug, the landing place of Ngardolólok. Immediately, they went there to see what it was. Arriving there, they were frustrated to see only red blossoming ĕás-milky mangrove trees. They cursed these trees, which, therefore, are not worth anything.

Since they were thirsty, they stamped on the rock and, at once, a spring was gushing out that is also called Ngarabeóug. Today, it is nothing more than a water hole. From there, they went into the village and because it rained they went to blai ra luil to ask for fire. Yet, because they looked so ugly, they were chased away. Therefore, they turned to blai Ngurulekóng, where only an old woman was at home. She invited them with the following words:

Come in, it is raining. — They entered, each one of them had a crab in his hand, which the woman roasted for them, while she offered each of them a taro-pounding-board to sit on. After they had eaten, they asked the old woman if she had any children. Since she did not have any, both of them said:

— Very well, then we will be your children. — She agreed and then all three lived together in harmony; the men went fishing, the woman gathered taro. However, a galid spirit, called a Ugélngabárd lived in blai Ngidálăg. He always went to the rubak-bai Ngramelulaũ and blew the Triton shell there. The pair asked their mother what kind of noise this was. She replied that it was a very brave galid spirit. They should never go there, so that he would not harm them. Yet one day, they decided to go there, nevertheless. They took along their clubs, and when they saw Ugélngabárd sitting in the bai and blowing the Triton shell, they attacked him. He, however, defended himself and a fierce fight started. The pair chased him away and he fled with all his belongings into the hole behind blai Ngidálăg, where he had to surrender. He surrendered the administration to a Guódăl and Kemád lĕ galid, and today, he is still venerated as a household god. The pair chose the place Gomũgtőkói ³ and ordered people to build them a house there.

¹ The “old man”. Some people assume that this galidspirit is only another form of Medegeĩpĕlau, with whom he also shares some characteristics. The name supposedly comes from the Keklaũ-people, thus is a foreign one (see story 8 about a Ugĕlkeklaũ a. Vol. 2).

² is only rarely seen in Ngikúr.

³ gomũg to bring together, ĩőkói “the talking”, this means all the talking brought down to one meaning, agreement.

The two galid spirits made Ngardolólók rich and powerful, this however, caused envy among the other high chiefs of Palau and they were scheming to subject the village. The crippled man called Ngaititegeiol in Ngardolólók offered the right opportunity. He was so entertaining to look at, that all chiefs longed to have him, therefore, he was sold from one to the other. From Góbak raluil he came to a Ibēdul on Goréör and from this one, via devious routes to a Rākläi in Melekéiok.

One day, this one asked him whom he considered to be the wealthiest and most powerful rubak. Ngaititegeiol had no intention to rank one higher than the others and, thus, causing problems for himself. Finally he said to a Rākläi that he was the richest and most powerful one. Yet, this one was not satisfied, and asked him to name all rubak with whom he had lived. Then he should tell the truth and name the one who was the most prestigious one. Ngaititegeiol remained silent for a while, then he said: I do not want to praise others in your presence, but as you are so keen to know, I will tell you that Góbalraluil in Ngardolólók is the first among all rubak in Pelau. Since in the other end of the house, where he is sits, some small baskets are hanging in front of the house beam and in each of them is the same amount of money, so that whenever someone wants to buy something, he just has to take a certain basket. In addition, he always has the best fish, he never lacks eggs, syrup, and palm wine.

In short, there never is any lack of good food, because he has a lot of servants. Therefore, I believe Góbalraluil is the wealthiest man in Pelau, with whom nobody can compare. — This pained a Rākläi’s heart and now he was constantly scheming how to get his hands on Góbal raluil. —

Rubak a Uromákl from Ngartúkür in Ngarárd travelled around Pelau, in order to visit all the wealthy houses. When he reached Udēs in Melekéiok, he asked: Who is the richest one in Pelau? People answered him: The richest person is Góbalraluil in Ngardolólók on Peliliou, because 3 people cut palm wine for him, two cook syrup, and one takes care of fresh palm wine, his usual drink. There is also a big pot of fish, yet only a small pot of fish is cooked for him and there is always a basket filled with megapod-eggs, in addition there is always money hanging behind him on the wall.

— When Uromákl heard this, he became greedy and concentrated how to destroy him and his house. One day, a ruk-dance was on in Ngarevíkl. He watched the dance and paid his money. A bedóiēl-spear throwing competition was also taking place, where a man from Ngarengasáng, by the name of Sesengés, stood on stage and caught the spears which where thrown at him in such a clever way, that Uromákl was surprised. He called him and invited him and his people to eat with him. After Three days after the feast had ended, he took him along, home to Ngartúkür and sat him into his shrine. He had all women and girls of both sides of the village assembled in front of his residence so that he could choose one. He chose a móngol, because people from the gogeál-lime rocks did not consider themselves worthy to court a woman from the land of Pelau. The móngol moved into his small house.

Sesengés was not allowed to go fishing or to work; he got all the food for free and whatever he wanted to have. After some time, since he felt alarmed about all the attention, he asked Uromákl: What is it I am supposed to do? — This one replied: You shall be my messenger! — The man from Ngarengasáng continued asking: Very well, tell me, what is the message I have to deliver?

— Uromákl answered: I want Ngardolólók to be destroyed!

— Then the guest said: Well, well, why didn’t you tell me before. I can do it. — Uromákl gave him money to pay his passage to Peliliou. First, he sailed to a Irai, from there he went over land to Ngatkíp, and crossed over to Goréör, where he found a canoe in Ngaregamai, which sailed to the island Ngëregóng at the Dégēs-entrance.

There, he paid the captain and walked at low tide across the reef to Ngardolólók. He went into Blai ra luil, remained there, and made himself useful. After some time, he convinced the person who prepared the drinks to give up his post and to hand the gomail ¹ drinking cup over to him. From now on, Sesengés prepared the gamádäg for the chief and was well known and loved by all. One day, when the egg-basket was empty, Diraluil, the woman of the house, said to some women: Tomorrow morning we are going to Ngabád to look for eggs.² —

The next morning, all the women of the village went to the small island, situated in the east of the Ngardolólók’s harbor. Yet, before they arrived there, Sesengés had already gotten there and had hidden himself. He observed the woman Diraluil. When she discovered a heap of leaves and started digging in it, he approached her unobserved and stuck her head into the heap. While the woman was stuck fast, he fetched a kikoi-shell and scraped away the skin around her genitals until she started bleeding. Then he quickly and unnoticed ran back to Ngardolólók, got his palm wine, and calmly cooked it. When Diraluil came back, she said to her companions: Go quickly and have something to eat, I am sick and want to be alone.— Soon, she was alone with Gobak ra luil and said to him: Look at me, what happened to me! — When he saw his wife so sore and had been told what had happened, he was furious at the people of Ngardolólók, because nobody told him who had done it. The following night he did not sleep. In the morning, he had a sailing canoe readied and sailed with his wife to Ngeaur. He remained one year there and, together with galid spirit Golungīs, made divinations and casts how to destroy Ngardolólók. Always breaking coconuts Gobak said the following to Golungīs, who repeated it:

mongalil l kmu Góbak a dio oténgēl	make signs and say: Gobak, if I will bring down
ku mlil Pēlau l mē oumákāmad	his canoe from Pelau, if it comes to a fight
ra Ngardolólók ě ng di mēñéóng ³	against Ngardolólók, if it will be taken?

Golungīs broke the nut, spoke the same words, then he said: No, it cannot be! — One day Gobak said: Then ask about this:

a ki di mokodir ⁴ ku Gobip ng kedēi,	If we kill Gobip ng kedēi,
ě ng mangaŋNgardolólók	will Ngardolólók then be taken?

He was thinking, if Gobip ng kedēi was killed, then this would cause the destruction of Ngardolólók. Golungīs replied, after he had broken a nut: Good. We need no more mangalil divination, it is true. Gobip ngkedēi was a man, yet, he was considered to be the wife ⁵ of the god a Guódēl in Ngardolólók. He was tattooed like a woman, wore baste aprons like the women, and lived together with the rubak’s wives in a galid-spirit house.

Just at that time, messengers from Ngardolólók came to Góbak, in order to ask him to return home, yet, he did not want to. He said nothing about the planned assassination of Gobip ng kedēi and waited until they would say so themselves. He knew well that people from Ngardolólók were rather upset about Gobip ng kedēi, because he always went bathing with the women, saw them naked, and altogether was up to a lot of mischief, since he was quite good looking. Soon, the messengers told Gobak that Gobip had to be killed. He agreed, yet, did not say yes. He said the Ngara melulau (as the council of Ngardolólók is called) should do whatever it wanted to do. Thus, the messengers went back and forth, until Gobak finally said: I will only return when Gobip ng kedēi is dead. — When the inhabitants of Ngardolólók heard this, they discussed how they could kill the man.

¹ actually “skull”, obviously because of its resemblance with a brain or a coconut shell, see story 207.

² Sesengés had a close friendship with another woman, who betrayed everything to him. She was also the one, who directed the companions to the other side, so that Diraluil was alone.

³ from ngu to take.

⁴ omekoüäd to kill.

⁵ See KUB. V, p. 35.

Yet, as galid spirit a Guódêl was powerful, he brought his wife Gobip on top of a tall breadfruit tree, so that nobody could find him.

At that time, the women of Ngardólok decided to make a blolóbol-excursion to Ngarekesauáol on Goréör, in order to earn some money there as daughters of joy. One woman had made the suggestion, apparently she had become enthusiastic about the idea because of Gobip ng kedēi as a go between of galid spirit a Guódêl. She had sent a message to the men’s club Ngaragárm asking for a canoe to transport them. When the canoe with the women on board sailed through the Dégēs-entrance towards the east, to sail north across the open sea, their mother, Gobip ng kedēi, signaled them at the island Ngëregóng. When the canoe got closer Gobip jumped on board and was taken along to Ngarekesauáol, where at once a message was sent to a Ibēdul: We brought along our old mother instead of a mongol. Ibēdul sent immediately the women’s council ar Kerengáp, consisting of Goréör’s 10 rubak-women, to Ngarakesauáol in order to bring Gobip ng kedēi to him.

Although this “mother” was a man, they still gave him a two-storied shrine, called sop, as his residence in Goréör and kept him company. Soon afterwards, galid spirit a Guódêl came from Pelíliou to Goréör in order to visit Gobip, who felt ashamed because of the obliging treatment there. The galid spirit was pleased and said to Gobip: Order all the women, each one of them to take a telutāu-mat and to go with her mat, to the Tukër-hill close to Ngarekesauáol. There they shall wave to the west, to Basás. They shall do so from morning to evening, if it rains or shines. While doing so they shall say the words: a basás e mēi! Then they will receive their reward! — This they did for one month and, lo and behold, the Antelope came (1783), ran aground on a Ulong, and Goréör became rich and powerful. In those days they did not know the meaning of the word basás ¹ and they argued about it.

Only later they learned from the foreign ship, that this depicted the smell of copper, respectively green rust. Because of the many presents of the white people and because of their help, the inhabitants of Goréör became over-confident, especially the men’s club Ngaratatiróu that received its name from tatiróu, the cloth as red as the sunset glow. a Guódel spurred the young people’s mischief and incited them against Ngardolólok. They accomplished their first act of strength at the place Mlotórog, at the river Lebúgöl, south of Goréör. In three fully loaded and equipped kabekl-war canoes they sailed there in order to support a miĕg-almond tree, which had started sliding. A big stone was lying underneath it. They raised it and, thus, restored the tree into its right position. Afterwards, they received an invitation to come to Melekéiok. a Rāklaĩ, the local high chief had heard from Uromákl — who was himself very rich, yet pretended to be stupid and avaricious so that people thought him to be poor — that he had heard that Góbakraluĩl in Ngardolólók was supposed to be the richest one.

He, however, had added: You are all rich yourselves! — This had angered a Rāklaĩ and he had informed the club Ngaratatiróu in Goréör to come and stay a few days in Melekéiok. Since the number of its members was so large, they sailed in 3 big war canoes, under the direction of their leader Ngirasúk, to Melekéiok. On their arrival they were well received. As an expression of their joy and their bravery — Melekéiok and Goréör had been adversaries since the old days — they announced that they would stay forever in Melekéiok. a Rāklaĩ took them to the rubak-bai in Melekeióng. There they remained, behaved loudly, and washed in the rain, in order to offend the people of the village. Before long, the chiefs of Melekéiok were so incensed about the little respect shown to them, that they wanted to destroy the club. a Rāklaĩ, though, did not allow it, because he saw that the young men served his purpose well.

From Melekéiok the Ngaratatiróu-club went on a klegádáol-visit to all the big places of Babldáob, staying three days in each place. a Rāklaĩ sent word to all of them that they were not to be harmed, despite all their acts of violence against men and woman.

¹ bau smell WALL.; obviously from the Engl. brass.

When they returned to Melekéiok, a Rāklaĩ managed to send them to their enemies, to Pelíliou. Their presumption had reached its peak. Sailing south, Ngirasúk ordered to stop in the Toi kobasáng, the passage between Malágal’s harbor and the island Ngarekobasáng. There stood a big almond tree. Ngirasúk went into the water underneath it, holding the spine of a stingray in his hand. Now he told his club members to climb the tree and jump on his hand into the water. Whoever was too cowardly to do so, he would not need for his trip to Pelíliou. While people jumped down he always turned his hand, without anybody noticing, so that the spine was pointing downwards. All jumped, except two men, whom he sent home. The others sailed to Pelíliou. Even before they arrived, a Rāklaĩ had sent messengers to the chiefs of Ngardolólok, that they should kill the club Ngaratatiróu.

The club stayed the first three days in Ngardolólok, causing much harm ¹. On the fourth day, they spread everywhere looking for some amusement. Thus, the task was easily carried out. When Ngirasúk was with half of the men at Ngerikl on the east coast; the other half stayed on the west coast. When Ngirasúk and his retinue went through Nagriáp, he and a part of his companions were attacked and killed ². The rest of them ran to the reef Ngëlovĩl on the eastern side, between the reef islands Ngargersiul and Ngërugēlptáng, where they were killed and buried underneath lovĩl-corals. Ngomoguatúit was the only one who escaped. He was the son of Kldngūl ra Tĕgamding, rubak X of Goréör. who had had a premonition and had warned his son. Following his father’s advice, he always kept the bailer in his hand and bailed the water out of the canoes in the channel instead of participating in the festivities, because he being a poor man was not entitled to do so. According to his father he had to be especially careful should he find the goru ³-bindings of the canoes cut.

Thus, he was the only one, who escaped. He ran to Ngëregóng, where he was taken on board of a canoe sailing to Nagregamaĩ. When people in Goréör heard about the murder of the Ngaratatiróu-club, they decided to take revenge. a Rāklaĩ’s messengers came offering his help. At first, people from Goréör did not go to Pelíliou to fight, but they killed everyone whom they could catch in the lime rocks. In this manner, they also caught a man called Golángĕp from Ngemelís ⁴. He had been born in Ngardolólok and was married in Ngarakeúkl. When he met the people from Goréör, he asked them: Why are you coming? — They replied: Ngaratatiróu has been killed in Ngardolólok, now you also have to die! — He was furious at his fellow countrymen, that they had not informed him. He replied: If you want Ngardolólok to be destroyed, then you better show mercy, otherwise you should kill me.

Therefore, after he had promised to help, they spared him. Now the Goréör-people returned home, while Golángĕp sailed to Ngarakeúkl, as had been agreed. When the first ones came to Goréör some blolóböl ⁵ women from Ngardolólok were there. They had no idea about the murder of Ngaratatiróu. The Goréor-people erected a pile of firewood on the pier of Ngarekamaĩs, in order to destroy the foreign women there by fire. When it burned the women jumped willingly in it, furious because their own people had sacrificed them. Therefore, after he had promised to help, they spared him. Now the Goréör-people returned home, while Golángĕp sailed to Ngarakeúkl, as had been agreed. When the first ones came to Goréör some blolóböl ⁶ women from Ngardolólok were there. They had no idea about the murder of Ngaratatiróu.

¹ two young daughters Ngaurot ra luil had been so misused that they died.

² It is said, that the chieftain had 36 spears in his body and could only be killed, when he was hit on the head with a stone.

³ The bindings connecting the hull of the canoe and the construction holding the outrigger beam

⁴ an island north of Pelíliou, see Vol. 1, map.

⁵ see above.

⁶ see above.

The Goréor-people erected a pile of firewood on the pier of Ngarekamaïs, in order to destroy the foreign women there by fire. When it burned the women jumped willingly in it, furious because their own people had sacrificed them. At once, a Ibëdul sent a message to a Rāklaĩ, he should come with the eastern side. But the western side of Babldáob also came, as did all of Ngarkldéu, so that a strong battle force was assembled. Ngarmid sent 10 kabekl war canoes, Ngaregamaĩ 2, Ngarbagéd 4, Ngarbagédasau 2, Ngarekobasáng 6, a Meúngs 2, etc. All sailed to Ngatkauáng, the landing place of Ngardolólok. There they anchored and build roofs over their canoes. On the first day, Mial from Nga ra kesauáol speared Regúgěr ra Tëgëkí from Goréör with an ulóiög-spear ¹. This saddened a Ibëdul, yet, a Rāklaĩ shouted to him: Do not weep, we will destroy Nagrdolólok. In case we do not have enough people I will send to Pelau for reinforcement. — He promised everyone a piece of galebúgěp-money for his bravery and in due course he paid them out to Ngiraidegĩl from Ngivál, Bagáp from Nggëssar, Ngiraiderebeĩ from Ngarekobasáng, Malsól from Ngarekeaĩ and others, so that altogether he spent seven. These brave ones sailed at night with a klotráol-canoe to Ngrakeúkl, to talk to Golángěp, who had been informed. He was waiting there at the headland, flinging small stones. When he hit the canoe, he waded into the water and when he reached the canoe, he felt the scrotum of each individual passenger, testing its size to determine the courage of each one of them. Surprised the inspected men asked him for the reason for this and he replied, that he could only use fearless people.

The following day, a large-scale ruk-dance was going to be held in Ngardolólok. Therefore, they all went together in the morning to Ngerikl on the east side. There they beached the canoe, ate breakfast, and then walked to the village, to blai Gomügtökói, the galid-house close to the village bai ². There is only a narrow path, on one side is a taro swamp, on the other are stones and trees. Here a few spears were thrown at them, the leader jumped back and forth and, doing this, fell into the swamp. Ngiraiderebeĩ laughed about this, he ran forwards, armed with a bundle of spears and a club, and luckily crossed over. The others followed suit. When all were on the other side the klemeaĩ ³-young men had just finished their dance. They sat on the stage, waiting for their replacement. When the free gotobáděł ⁴-dancers came, they stepped down. At once, the arrivals pushed among them, creating such an confusion that everyone was fighting everyone else. People from Goréör set the galid-house and the bai on fire. When the fleet in Ngatkauáng saw the smoke, they started attacking people there, too. They managed to drive back the outposts and to invade the village. Most of the Ngardolólok-people fell by foreign or brotherly hands. Those fleeing into the trees were speared while climbing them or thrown down.

Golángěp fled in time to Ngarakeúkl, so that nobody saw him. When the fight ended a Rāklaĩ asked Ibëdul, if he could take the captured women, children, and old people, called ngais in Palauan, to Melelkéiok. Ibëdul gave his permission. a Rāklaĩ settled them in a Ulangaráng, nearby Keklau. After they had stayed there for a while a Rāklaĩ, with a Ibëdul’s consent, brought them back to Ngardolólok. They traveled outside, across the sea, to avoid being attacked by the people from Goréör. However, since they attacked again these poor, persecuted people in Ngardolólok, they were brought to Ngaradesúm nearby a Iraĩ, from where they were brought home, after a few years, by people from Goréör and a Iraĩ. Ngardolólok was destroyed seven times. The last time by a Ibëdul Kingsós.

In the end, they no longer defended themselves, they were so feeble and weak because of the offense of their galid a Guóděł. Even today, the destruction of the club Ngaratatiróu is still in everyone’s memory.

¹ Obviously while playing.

² Illustr. Vol. 2.

³ For each ruk-dance a club had to go into seclusion for several months, these are the klemeaĩ in contrast to the free gotobáděł, who “go outside”.

⁴ The leader was Truiug a diál, see bl II Goréör.

It supposedly had many hundred members. a Ibëdul ordered the sole survivor Ngomoguatúit to build a monument for his companions and he carved figures from the main posts ¹ of the canoehouses a Delúi and Sägámús. They can still be seen there and they are called Ngesegél a garagár.

Story 162. How Ngasiás On Pelíliou Got The Right To Release The New a Ibëdul.

Once upon a time, rubak Góbakramangaláng from Ngasiás came to Goréör with the intention to steal one of a Ibëdul’s daughters, in order to establish a close bond with a Idíd. At that time, Ngasiás was very much oppressed and Góbak hoped o secure assistance in this way. He remained five days in Goréör, waiting for an opportunity. At the day of his departure he had won the young girl for himself and she went down to the landing place for canoes in a Delúi. There, Góbak took the little one on board and sailed away. Arriving in Ngasiás, he heard that people in Goréör were looking for a Ibëdul’s daughter. He sent a message to a Idíd: The little one had slept on board, he had hoisted the sails, and only realized at Cape Ngaramediú what had happened. Then it had been too late to turn around. Gongolákl, Ibëdul’s side of the village, sailed down to visit the princess and to bring her food. Góbak now admitted to have abducted the little one intentionally, in order to have closer connection with a Idíd. “Leave the child with me”, he shouted, “I love her, and help me to make Ngasiás powerful”.

People agreed and supported the people of Ngasiás, which became stronger. Then Góbak said, “Thank you! When a Ibëdul comes, we will pay him for taking off his hat and for his coming on shore in Ngasiás”. a Ibëdul said, “Well! However, when you are building the new rubak-bai a Itói, then I want to pay for one half of it, while Ngaragomleblógöl ² (the rubak of Ngasiás) shall pay for the other half”. So it was from then on. However over time, people from Goréör got more and more careless and a Ibëul had problems to tame the arrogance of his people. People in Pelíliou were so depressed that they even rubbed the green stripes off their money, in order to make it less desirable. This is why such beads are called kluk l pelíliou.

Story 163. How Madraskesúk Separated From His Wife.

log.: bai 53 VIII illustr. d.-pl. 21^d.

Once upon a time, a man, called Ngiratágěr from Goikúl, arrived in the evening with his canoe in Pelíliou. He landed in Ngatkauáng, the harbor of Ngardolólok. According to custom, he went on shore with the sail in his hand to go into the fishermen’s bai. There he saw Mad ra skesúk from Ngasiás sleeping with his wife, with whom he did not have a good marriage. They had arrived too late and, therefore, had not gone any more to their village. Ngiratágěr slipped into the bai, put the sail down, and grabbed the genitals of the woman. As she did not resist, he slept with her, then he left the house again. Then, he shouted from outside: Mad ra skesúk, I am here! — This one got up, lit a fire, and ate with the arrival, then he laid down and slept again.

On the next morning Mad ra skesúk went to his house in Ngasiás, and at once, he started scolding his wife, as he used to do. Then she said: Tonight, a man slept with me in the bai! — Thus, Mad ra skesúk chased away his wife and remained unwed for the rest of his life.

Story 164. The Two-Headed Galid spirit Máluád lě gúr In Ngasiás And His Drifting Stomach.

log.: bai 45 II^billustr. d.-pl. 19^c, bai 69 V^b, bai 77 I, bai 75 I, bai 80 VII^a, bai 95 VII^b, bai 131 VI^b illustr. d.-pl. 21^f, bai 141 IV^b illustr. d.-pl. 21^f, bai 152 VII^b.

A galid spirit with two heads lived in the cave a Irúr next to Ngasiás on Pelíliou. One day, he heard a noise in the channel Ngabúngěl, he went there and found two children, which he devoured, one with each mouth

¹ according to another information, the heads in the front beams of the frame are the memorial symbols.

² The name is because in former times the bai stood on the hill Gomleblóg 1.

Then the inhabitants of the place got afraid and sent a message to nearby Ngarakeúkl, because of the pending danger, they wanted to move to another place. The others agreed. People packed their household goods, loaded their canoes, and sailed away. Only an old woman, called Magád rē ngírírs after her blai Ngírírs ¹, stayed behind, since she lived at a lonely spot and nobody cared for her. She moved into a small cave in the vicinity of bai Debūt that is now called Ngaramēaus. There she dwelled, at night looking for food and cooking it. After some time, she got pregnant and gave birth to two boys, whom she called Ta gǎréál bedengél ² and Ta gǎréál a btil, because shark teeth (gareál) were located in their skin and in their buttocks.

When they had grown up, their mother warned them against making noise. Initially the boys were diligent, yet, soon they wanted to know, why they had to keep silent. Now, their mother told them the reasons. After they had grown stronger, both of them decided to destroy the galid spirit. So one day, they went into the channel and caused a commotion. At once Mǎluád came. When he tried to catch one of them, this one jumped into his mouth, cut off his tongue, and jumped out again. The other boy cut his other mouth in pieces. The boys accomplished this with the help of their shark teeth and the galid spirit died. When he was dead, they informed their mother, who went down to the channel with both of them. She told the boys to bring a black pinna-oyster shell, and with it she cut the monster’s stomach out of its body. She placed it on a round decorative stool, and set it adrift with the following magic words: Hurry away to our people. When they say, you are the stomach of fish, you will shrink, when they say you are from Mǎluád, then you will get big ³! Whereupon, the stool floated away and drifted to the channel Ngaranguál in a Meúngs on Ngarekobasáng, whereto people had fled. When they saw the stomach, they debated, what kind of fish it could be; then the piece became smaller and smaller; however, when they thought of Mǎluád, it swelled up. Thus, it had to be dead.

They sent a canoe to discover the truth. Arriving in the channel Ngabúngĕl, the two boys were just busy catching pkoi-crabs for their mother. They did not let the canoe enter the channel. It returned to a Meungs. Now people decided to sail together to Nagsiás and to beg their allowance to return home. Half of them sailed away, the other stayed behind. After some negotiations the boys allowed the arrivals to enter and, thus, the place was revived. In order to thank the family Ngírírs it was decided that after the renovation the remaining wood of the roof of the rubak-bai a Itói belonged to them and that their members had the right to get fire wood from this bai, when they needed some at night.

Story 165. Gobak ra mangaláng And The Destruction Of Ngasiás.

Ngasiás did not know how to behave, despite the efforts of Vítāgasiás. A girl from Ngeaūr was married with Gobak ra mangaláng, rubak III of Ngasiás. One day, a men’s club wanted to sail from Ngasiás to Ngeaūr, to get some bai-girls from there. Then Gobak’s wife said: Let me take this opportunity to also travel there. I will return with the club or, if necessary, I will stay longer. — Thus, they sailed together to a Ngeaūr. Despite their efforts the club only managed to get one mongol there. Finally, Gobak’s wife was willing to act as the other mongol. Thereupon, the club returned with the two mongol to Ngasiás. When they arrived in the channel Ngabúngĕl, Gobak was just there, beating coconut fibers. Since he saw his wife getting on shore, he was satisfied and continued working. The club hauled its canoe on shore and the woman carried a basket away. Since she did not say anything, he also did not talk to her. Afterwards the men went to the village and both women were among them, they went all together into the bai. A young man came to Gobak and said: I think I saw our mother in the bai together with the men’s club.

¹ The name Irírs still exists as the female title of blai X Ngaramesĕpelú in Ngasiás.

² a buld the skin, poss. budél seems to be an old version; MC CLUER writes for “body” Pu-thing-el. According some other information, the second one was called a Rus bedengél “spine of the stingray his skin”.

³ see story 75 a. 128.

— Very well, he said, let us go up there. — He washed himself and sent a messenger to the bai asking for an explanation. This one brought the message that his wife was as a mongol in the bai. Hence, he returned to the channel and smeared his left arm with mud. When he reached his house, everyone knew already. He felt cold. They lit a big fire to warm him. When he was warm enough, he rose asking for soot and yellow curcuma. With the soot he drew a line along his left arm and on his cheek, because the mud did not stick to it. However, with the yellow color, he painted a line on his right arm. In the evening he did not eat anything, but went to Ngardolólók and sat down on Ngarameluláu, the rubak-bai’s platform, staying there all night long in the same position. At the break of dawn, he drew a second line with sooth and yellow, next to the first one. In the morning, when Gobak ra luíl opened his door, he saw Gobak ra mangaláng sitting outside. He opened a side door and said to him: Gobak, come inside, do not sit out there!

— He replied: No, I will come to you, to the front side, so you can see me well. — Now, Gobak ra luíl saw is body painting and he asked him: What is wrong with you? I am afraid for you and Pelíliou. — Now, Gobak ra mangaláng told him what had happened and ended his account like this: The painting is supposed to signify: Ngasiás has to be destroyed and to sink below Ngardolólók.— The other one said: If this is your opinion, you should send a message to Goréör or to all of Pelíliou, because alone we are too weak. — Gobak ra mangaláng replied: No, only two of us should do it. — Gobak ra luíl spoke: Very well, but first we have to prepare the goru -bindings for our kabékl-canoes, at once we have to bind them, and have to put the canoes this very day into the water. And we spread the message that, tomorrow early in the morning, Nagrdolólók is going to catch mullets.

— So it happened. Both of them slept in Ngatkauáng, where those, participating in the fishing trip, were also supposed to come. During the night, small groups of people from Ngasiás came this way. However, the club Ngaramelemótom was ambushing all the small groups on the stone path Gádēsúrou and killed all of them. So, a great part of the people from Ngasiás perished. The next morning, the club Ngaramelemótom sent an envoy with the message to Gobak ra luíl, that all the Ngasiás-people were dead. This one informed Gobak ra mangaláng about it. Thereupon, this one went to the water and cleaned himself and colored himself yellow like a sisabangiau-bird.

When news about this event reached Nagsiás, everyone ran away, on top of the mountain. Gobak ra mangaláng wanted the club to follow them, to kill all the men and to bring the woman to the bai in Ngardolólók. Chasing them, they found women and children in the bush. Dilíklep, rubak-woman II, called out to them: Wait, take us to Ngasiás, I will prepare a supply of mongol and will send it to Ngardolólók. — When this had happened Gobakraluíl brought Gobák ra mangaláng back to Ngasias and made him rubak III of Ngasiás, because before he had only been rubak I of the village part Mangaláng.

However Dilíklép sang:

1 ak mu leból lengerá a lengelék ¹ mailugék reMelemó, ti aukík mĕ ngilĕgeigá ma mkóng gatekíl Gomiótĕl ² ma mlus 5 ma goremetél Ngasiás ĕ ki gilteklá a li la geikáng a kemiél Melemó	I say something as my cry and my plea to Ngaramelemótom, my shame, and they have come to you, as if Gomiótĕl would be a handful and coral stones and the bush of Ngasiás, we want to carry it, so it would come to you. You, people from Melemótom,
---	---

¹ lángĕl scream, from lmángĕl to weep.

² In former times a place on the heights close to Ngaregól: gatekil–load to carry it the hand. Ngasiás sent an úlog to Ngardolólók: if all this would be easy, I would bring it.

8 ngará komokél liliog what other requests do you have?
Thus Ngasiás was punished and Ngardolólok got supremacy over Peliliou.

Story 166a. How Poor Mageĩ deũid Became Rich.

log.: bai 59 I illustr. d.-pl. 22^a, bai 75 VII^b, illustr. pl. XIV⁸.

Mageĩ deũid, a man from Ngasiás on Peliliou, was poor. One day, when Ngasiás had to pay money for a ruk-dance to Ngardolólok, he went to Ngiragongór, the high chief of his place and borrowed a piece of galebúgěp-money as blekátł, his payment. He got it and, after having marked it, he passed it on. However, people from Peliliou said: Mageĩ deũid borrowed a galebúgěp from Ngiragongór! How will he be able to pay back? — Mageĩ deũid stayed in Ngasiás, diligently cut palm wine, cooked syrup, and filled with it his coconut bottles, putting on all of them corks made from golúděg-soft wood. He stored them on the reákl-board above the fireplace. Furthermore, he hung all old coconuts that he found while cutting palm wine, in his house. When Mageĩ deũid had three hundred coconut-bottles filled with syrup and many coconuts, he build a big raft and went to the gogeál Ngurukdápěl, to a place called Biluk I dort, where many dort-ironwood trees grew. He brought his raft under such a tree and cut it off, so that it fell right on the raft.

Then he pushed the raft away and let it drift, while he was working on the wood, creating, according to his plans, the so-called small ulangáng-spirit houses, which are the adornment of the chiefs’ compounds. Before he built these houses, he performed some magic that he had learned from Delbakł the spirit of the sea. Then he sold these shrines to the rubak. First he drifted to Gólei, where he delivered one to Tegógo for one galebúgěp, then he sold some more, to Ngiraroĩs in Galáp, to Mad in Ngabúkěd, to Merengór in Ngivál, and to a Rákłaiṯ in Melekéiok. Each one of them gave him one galebúgěp, off these a Rákłaiṯ’s had his mark on it. Then, he returned without his raft to Peliliou. He went to Ngiragongór and placed two galebúgěp-pieces in front of him, of which one had the sign. Ngiragongór choose the other one and, thus, his debt was paid. Now Mageĩ deũid was a rich man, and since this time all wealthy houses in Palau have a small shrine.

Story 166b. Explanation Of Story 166a On Ngeaur:

Poor Mageĩ deũid from Ngeaur, had cut a tree there, together with his galid, in order to build houses and to earn some money. He took a raft and went, together with his galid, out at sea, where numerous houses were created. Then he sailed to Ngarekobasáng, where he sold one to the high chief for 2 galebúgěp, the same he did in a Imelĩk and in other places. Then he went again to Ngarekobasáng and earned some more money by cutting palm wine. Finally, he returned to Ngeaur as a rich man and this is why Ngeaur and Ngarekobasáng are still today closely related.

Story 167. Pěágěd arsaĩ, The Monster Bird.

log.: bai 114 II^b illustr. d.-pl. 22^b, bai 132 II^b, bai 136 V^b, see also ornament in A. B. MEYER ’81, pl. 5, row 11.

In Ngariáp on Peliliou were two hard-working brothers, the older one was cutting palm juice and the younger one was collecting firewood. One day, the last one left early in the morning to cut wood in the mangroves. He only returned home at midday, without bringing anything along. When the older one scolded him angrily, he said, “I had to fight a big bird, which sat on the děngěs-bush. He threw mangrove fruits at me, while I lunged at him with clubs.” “Go,” the older one shouted angrily, “get going and bring some wood, so we can light a fire”. Then the younger one left, and soon brought something, with which they cooked, and they ate their lunch. In the afternoon, when the younger one came again to the mangrove bushes, the bird was again sitting there. The boy took three sticks, about one cubit long, and threw them at the bird; however, he did not achieve anything. Then, he took his axe and threw it at the monster, but it caught it and flew away with it. The bird went to its house, which was in the southern part of Ngariáp, besides the magic tree Bars re kesau, and put the axe on an upper shelf.

When the boy came home without his axe, his older brother became mad at him and chased him away, to fetch it. He did not give him a bit of food and also did not allow him to drink any water.

Weeping the boy went to the mangroves. He was looking for the robber of his axe, but he could not find him. Standing in the mangroves he determined the direction, in which the bird had disappeared and, following it he correctly, arrived at blai Kesau in Ngariáp where he found the Pěágěd arsaĩ sitting in his house. Weeping he sat down in front of the door. The bird asked him, “Why are you crying so much?” Whereupon the boy told how his brother had scolded him and how he had been chased away to look for his axe, because otherwise they would not have any firewood; not even a bite of food nor a drop of water he had given him and now he was hungry and thirsty. Pěágěd invited him to enter and to eat something. He took a small piece of fish and taro, placed both onto a big gongál-wooden plate and set it in front of the boy. This one shouted angrily, “How am I supposed to satisfy myself with just a few bites, I am so hungry”. “Eat, just eat,” cried Pěágěd. Surprisingly, as soon as the boy had taken a small bite, it immediately regretted ¹. He ate a long time, until he could not swallow anything anymore.

Fearfully he watched the bird, because he could not finish. In Palau it is the custom to finish all the food, or to take the rest home with you. However, this one only shouted “finished” and the regrowth stopped at once. Then he asked the boy, “What are you saying now?” and he replied, “My brother and I, we are not married, he cuts palm wine and I cut the wood to cook the syrup, which is our only food! Now, as I no longer have an axe, we are in a dilemma!” “Very well,” Pěágěd exclaimed, “Choose one you like. There are adzes in the shrine, in the room underneath the house and on the shelves!” The boy soon found his own one and he considered it good enough. Happily he sat down again and the bird said, “I know you are poor. Therefore, I challenged you to fight, to get your adze and so that you would follow me into my house. Hence, I want to do some good deed and help you. Listen carefully what I am telling you now. When you reach the plot of land called Gataulúkěs and you hear a clicking noise and clapping hands, then do not look back, yet in Galěeulúkěs you can turn around without any problems, when you hear something”. He left and did exactly as he had been told. When he heard a clicking noise and clapping hands in Gataulúkěs he walked on without turning around. Yet, when the same thing happened in Galěeulúkěs he turned around and there stood a beautiful woman, who walked towards him and said she wanted to be his wife. There were many other pretty girls, who also wanted to have him as their husband, but he said, “This is my wife!”

Thus, he returned home with his adze and with a wife. When the brother saw both of them, he asked astonished, how this had happened and the boy reported everything that had occurred. Some days later, the older brother said to the younger one, “Today, you can cut palm wine, I will go and collect fire wood.” He took the adze and disappeared. Since he had not memorized accurately the words of his brother, he already turned around in Gataulúkěs and petrified he saw a bunch of ugly and sick women, who followed him when he was fleeing back to his house. The younger brother was angry with the additional household members, because the women did not go away. Yet, he remained silent, until the older brother asked, “What do we have to do to get rid of them?” The younger one discussed it with his wife, then he said the following, “We have to take a cooking pot and have to defecate into it!” The three of them did this and when it was half full, they tied it shut and left it standing.

Short time afterwards, the older one shouted, “I cannot stand it anymore with all these women! “Keep the house and make your palm juice alone!” This he said and ran away. “Very well,” the younger one replied and started to cut and boil the palm juice. When he was done, he ate with his wife, then he said to the sick women pointing at the closed pot, “Here is your syrup, you can eat all of it!”

¹ Compare with story 10 and 168 about a Ugélkekłau.

Then he left the house together with his wife. At once, the women attacked the pot, when they encountered the terrible smell, they fled out of the house and disappeared. Now the couple moved in again and had the entire house for themselves. The woman cultivated taro and he cut palm wine, thus they always had plenty to eat. The sick women became terrible forest-devils, called Tëngangói lë galid. People leave stinking fish in the bushes, called túngēl, for them, in order to appease them¹. The older brother had run to Ngardolólok, where he became the minor god a Imók.

Story 168. The Four Rubak From Ngarakeúkl, Who Chased The Sun²;

rekeúkl lulěltóir ra sils.

log.: on the gable: bai 1 illustr. pl. II^b, bai 11, bai 28, bai 40, bai 45 a. 46 illustr. vol. 2 plate 5 a. p. 75, bai 54 illustr., bai 65, bai 69 illustr. pl. IV^b, bai 85 illustr. pl. VIII, bai 86, bai 96, bai 100, bai 101 illustr. vol. 3 pl. 15¹, bai 114, bai 116 see vol. 1 pl. 1, bai 118, bai 125, bai 130, bai 145, bi 146; imūl: bai 90 IV^a, bai 132 II^a illustr. Plate XIV². One day, four men were sitting at Ngabadángēl, the landing place of Ngarakeúkl on Peliliou, they were watching the setting of the sun. They decided to follow the sun, to see where it was going. Thus, the next day, they took a canoe and sailed to the west. In the evening they were quite close to the sun and saw how it plucked some fruit from a déngēs-mangrove and threw them into the ocean. When the sharks snapped at them, it quickly submerged unnoticed by the fish. The four men did the same. In the depth they reached the gable of a house, on which the sun was hanging. They glided down the gable and reached the ground. Looking around they saw a small house filled with bananas and sweets. They beckoned to each other and started to feast themselves. However, this was the residence and the toilet of galid spirit a Ugéleklāu. He suddenly felt hungry and sent someone to his small house with the following words: I am having such pain. Have a look, someone must be eating my food. —

The messenger found the four men. He reported: My father, there are four men eating your waste! — Ugéleklāu ordered to bring them to him. They were brought and given to eat, actually each one of them received a small cube of fish and a small piece of taro. The four guests grumbled, thinking they would never be able to eat their fill. However Ugéleklāu told them, to keep eating, it would be enough. In fact, as soon as one of them took a piece, a new one was lying there at once.³ They sat there until they were more than full, and still the food kept on coming. When the galid spirit saw their dilemma, he said: If you take now, it will be finished! — Then the growth of food ended. After they had washed their wooden plates, they came back and remained with a Ugéleklāu.

Now, they were in heaven (see story 10). Yet, every time he went outside he warned them not to open the tridacna-shell at the fireplace. One day, when he was outside, they could no longer restrain themselves and opened the shell. Suddenly like through a window, they saw in front of them their home place Ngarakeúkl and the people playing on the shore. Homesick they started weeping. When a Ugéleklāu returned and found them crying, he asked for the reason. Because of all their tears, they could not answer. He realized what had happened and said: Do not cry, tomorrow you will return home. — The following morning he told one of his servants to bring a piece of bamboo with four knots. First he took the stone Pibúügl bad that still stands today in Ngarakeúkl and stuck it into one side. Then came one man in front of each knot. When the first one was inside and a Ugél asked him, if he was sitting comfortably, he replied: Something is itching on my back. Then a Ugél said: At home you shall be the Gadrekerói ⁴! The second one, placed in front of the second knot, said: Something at my side itches!

¹ Compare with story 98.

² The story is, only slightly different and not so detailed about the chiefs, in KUB. I, p. 45 and Semp. II p. 332; perf. of oltoir to chase.

³ in KUB. I, p. 45, it is written that the sun was their host, see story 167.

⁴ rubak I of Ngarakeúkl; mangarkerói to itch.

— He received the name Gad I pelú ¹. The third one complained about pain in his intestines and was, therefore, called Gëdělág ². Finally the forth shouted: I am in pain!

— He received the name Ugélmekedíu ³. When all four of them were in the bamboo a Ugéleklāu took some Croton (kesuk-variegated croton) leaves and blocked the other end of the cane and threw it down to Ngarakeúkl. It landed there with such a force that it perforated a stone called Ngururúkl and that has only been destroyed a few years ago. After the bamboo was lying on the beach, some children came to look at this piece of wood, which they did not know. Hearing a voice from the inside, they ran home and reported it. Then people came and wanted to cut the bamboo into pieces. They suddenly heard a voice from inside: Don’t cut it in pieces, just remove the plug!

— This they did and to everyone’s surprise the four missing men came out. From now on, they ruled as the first four rubak over the settlement Ngarakeúkl. They planted the croton (kesuk-variegated croton) at the communal bai, where it grew into a beautiful tree, the most prominent of all the decorative bushes in Palau. The bamboo, however, they threw into the sea. It drifted to Ngarekobasáng, where people planted it and therefore so much bamboo is growing there. Yet, people from Ngarekeúkl received the right to get, for free, as much bamboo as they liked from there ⁴.

Story 169. The Female Cannibal Dira gămärtál.

log.: bai 10 IV^a, bai 18 IV^b, bai 34 V^b illustr. d.-pl. 22^c, bai 63 VI^b, bai 106 V^b, bai 122 IV^a, bai 114 VII^a, see also A. B. MEYER’ 81, pl. 4, row 10.

A women’s club in Peliliou colored their teeth with coal. After 4 days were over, they took a melépēs, a pleasure bath at the end. Close to the bathing place an old man was beating coconut fibers to twine them into a string. Since each woman had some scraped coconut in a coconut-sheath ⁵ to wash their hair with it, he asked them: Whereto? — They replied: We want to wash ourselves. — Good, he said, don’t you want to give some of it, so that I can also wash myself? — But the first one passed by quickly. Asking the second one, she replied, she was in a hurry and pointed to the next one, and so on . Finally, the last one, an ugly and poor woman ⁶ gave him some. He said to her: In case you want to sleep a bit on the driftwood ⁷ after the bath, then place yourself closest to the shore on the tree. This she did. When everyone was asleep the old man took the hand of the ugly woman, he pulled her on shore, and sent the woman away. Then he made some magic and pushed the tree into the sea. When the women woke up, they were in the middle of the open sea.

After some time the wood drifted to Nggeiangēl, the place of the female cannibal, Dira gamartál. She invited the women on shore and cared for them, like her own children ⁸. Yet, already after the first night, and after all women had slept, one of them was missing in the morning. Diragamartál and her husband had taken her away and devoured her. Now the women became suspicious. The following night, they placed pieces of coconut kernel on their eyelids, so that it look like they had their eyes open and were awake.

¹ rubak II, he thought of his part of the village, his bitalpelú.

² rubak III; dělág intestines.

³ rubak IV; from mankēkēdiu, to be in pain, to fold.

⁴ According to KUB. they are not only allowed to get bamboo, but, in case a mast breaks, they also have the right to take a complete mast from any house. Its owner cannot prevent it, since actually all bamboo belongs to them.

⁵ tageiēr, similar to a woven textile.

⁶ It is said, this ugly woman was Kerengókl (see story 17 Tipetipakmiëg).

⁷ gotáor see story 204.

⁸ in log. VII a, in bai 144 it is depicted that she had 10 children (kum-crabs), which carried, just like galitūk-dancing women, klbógēl-twigs in their hands. She pushed them with the wood into the sea.

Yet, the pieces of coconut had fallen off from one of them. The couple grabbed her and locked her into a tridacna shell. In the morning the others heard the old woman say: Slaughter the woman and hang the intestines on a tree and put the blood into a wooden bowl, so that I can eat and drink, when I come home from the taro patch.

— When she had left, the women searched for the missing one. They deloused the old man and cared for him until he fell asleep. Then they looked for the shell, found and opened it, and released the locked one. Then they took a súmēs-taro skewer and put it into the ear of the sleeping man. With the help of a togotogosúld, a fiber-beater, they drove it inside so that the old man died. Then they cut him up, hung his intestines onto a tree and filled his blood into a wooden bowl. Then they filled an empty coconut shell with ants and brought it with them on top of a coconut palm, where they awaited the return of Diragamartál. Soon she came back, savored the intestines and the blood. In her complacency she called out twice the following words, as if talking to someone:

ak golia ngalekél ueī!	Someone ate his child, woe!
and the ones above answered:
ak golia uádam elëgēsúp elē galpáel!	Someone ate the father with the thick leg, with the sick leg!

When Diragamartál heard this, she consciously looked for her husband. When she could not find him, she climbed the coconut palm to the women, who threw ants from the top into her face. So she had to climb down again to clean herself. When she tried again, the same thing happened.

Then she came with an axe and cut down the palm tree. While she cut, she shouted: gomúkl ¹, a ke mer a pelú! Fall over, but towards the land! The ones above, however, shouted: gomúkl a ko mor a dáob! Fall over, but towards the sea!

The palm fell towards the sea. Each woman had a dry sheath of a coconut blossom; only one of them had a green one. With it, each had one leaf sheath as a sail. Now each one of them sat down on her blossom-sheath and sailed away. But the heavy, green sheath lagged behind and Diragamartál, who sat on her taro-pounding-board hammering on it with the gai-pounder, soon closed in on her. When the woman was outrun, she realized that she could no longer escape and so she shouted to the old woman: Mother, look at this beautiful Tridacna shell, go and get it, so we will have something to eat. — Diragamartál replied: How am I supposed to do this? — Then the other one said: Dive down and hold your hair into it, so you can pull it up with them. — The old woman did this and when the shell closed, the female cannibal could not free herself any more and drowned. Thus, the women escaped. However, when they arrived at night in Pelíliou and every one of them knocked at her house, asking to be let in, they all got the same reply: Go away, our child is dead. Thus, they all turned into banana trees of the basói kēeam-kind.

	Chant of the 10 kum -crabs (see above footnote 3). My own translation.
a Diragamartáliáng	Diragamartál, oh.
a ki dí maltóu (r) ² rengém	we only carry according to your wish
a gēlagēe kio kum kul	today we kum
mesése kēsáko ra mokōsóng	hard-working kēsáko -crabs ...

Story 170. Golungīs.

log.:Golungīs: bai 7 IV^b, bai 13 V^b, bai 40 III^a illustr. d.-pl. 22^d, bai 48 s. illustr. pl. II^d, bai 52 IV^b illustr. d.-pl. 22^d, bai 73 IV^a, bai 117 w. illustr., bai 129 V^b, Iluógēl: bi 6 IV^b, bai 12 II^b, bai 29 VI^a illustr. d.-pl. 22^f, bai 86

¹ gomúkl is not quite clear; WALL.omügēl to topple something, to fell; but gomu the hammer to break a nut; ke mēr you go, ko mor you (pl.) go.
² oltóurto carry on the back.

III^a, bai 88 VII^b illustr. d.-pl. 22^c, bai 115 IV^a illustr., bai 132 IV^a illustr. pl. XIV¹⁶.

The daughter of Tegógo, rubak I in Gólei, was called Tarisél. She did not want to marry. People said, she refused all messengers, and they jokingly said, “Does she want to marry Golungīs?” When she heard this, she asked who he was and where he lived. People told her, “Golungīs is a rubak in Ngeaur̃”. Thus, Tarisél decided to go there. Slowly she proceeded to the south and finally reached Pelíliou, by land and by water. From there she went to Ngeaur̃. There, she went to blai I Dósüp in Ngarapelaũ, where she was friendly received by Dilēpelaũ, the family’s title holding woman. Since she did not have a daughter, she was happy to welcome her.

Tarisél helped the old woman in the taro patch. She taught the girl everything and made her acquainted with the local circumstances. She repeatedly warned her newly found daughter in dead earnest not to enter the rubak-bai Ngabīs ¹, because it was the house of the galid. The girl agreed to not to do so, yet she took the first unobserved opportunity to visit Golungīs, because she had quickly found out that he was living in the bai. She took a coconut husk, as if she wanted to go and get some fire and went into the bai. When Golungīs saw her coming, he asked her taken by surprise “What do you want here?”

She answered, “I want to see Golungīs!” He replied, “I am the one,” and invited her to enter. She entered, but to her surprise she saw that the entire room was filled with an enormous fleshy mass, which grew out from between Golungīs’ thighs ², and hardly left any free space to allow her to sit down. Determined she sat down next to the man, and they started a conversation.

After some time Golungīs posed the question if she was hungry. When she consented, he said, “just open the small door at the side of the swelling”, and when Tarisél did so, she found inside banana and sweet dishes, which she enjoyed very much. Whatever was left she carried home. When Dilepelaũ saw the food, she asked where they came from. Tarisél admitted to have been in the bai and gotten the sweets from Golungīs. Oh, cried the old woman, you are the only one, who loves Golungīs. He gave you good things, so you can go to him. — This the girl did and soon she also stayed at night with the man, who was in the possession of demonic powers. Whenever Tarisél came in the evening, he asked his servant to prepare a hot bath for him. Due to the power of the hot steam he turned into a beautiful young man. Then they slept in the small ulangáng-shrine nearby. Thus, they became man and wife.

One day, Tarisél said to her husband: Golungīs, my brother is sick. — He replied: Very well, tomorrow, you can sail home. — How am I supposed to do this, cried Tarisél, I don’t have a canoe. — He replied, he would take care of a means of transport. The following morning, they went to the beach. Golungīs called out to the sea, and a sea-spider ³ came, on whom he sat his wife and a boy as her companion. In this manner, they both arrived safely in Gólei. Following the orders of her husband, Tarisél had a dancing stage built and a residential house cleaned, in order to prepare for a visit, because he planned to organize a galsímēr-feast in the honor of his wife. When everything was ready, Tarisél and the boy traveled once again to Ngeaur̃, reporting to Golungīs, that they had fulfilled his orders.

Now, this one filled a lot of money from his scrotum, which therefore became again smaller, into a basket and sailed with Tarisél on the sea-spider to Gólei, where the mur-feast was celebrated with a great deal of ceremonial. Golungīs distributed much money from his basket, and in the end, he gave Tegógo and his daughter what was left.

¹ According to some other information it was the rubak-bai Gereiud, situated in those days on the other side of the taro patch Urird.

² The storyboards show clearly that it was his scrotum (medi).

³ Halobates, in Pel. ilokugíl, as spidery insect living on the surface of the sea, see d.-pl. 22d.

Then he returned alone to Ngeaur, where he is still known today as a galid. According to another legend, he turned into the stone Sokodiáng that is still standing next to the one of his mother a Iluógěl next to rubak-bai in Gólei. Sokodiáng actually stands for another name of Golungīs and it means “to widen”, in reference to the man’s big testicles.

His mother a Iluógěl is well known as the one who distributed taro. It is said that she came from the west. Further on, it is said that she always moved around Palau, carrying taro patches on her hands and distributing them or also only as the one who planting saplings. In a Imelĭk she met with the local galid Itúngěl-bai. She only worked at night and at sunrise she turned into a stone. After her arrival on Ngeaur, she lived in Ngaramásăg in blai Ngadedúr¹, and there she gave birth to Golungīs. It is said, that after his return from Gólei, he found his mother’s house fallen into ruin. She had been treated badly. Therefore, he took the blai and a piece of taro patch and moved with his mother to Ngatpáng, where he lived in Ngimis. His scrotum had gotten small, since he had left all its content in Gólei.

When a Iluógěl had passed away, he moved to a Iraĭ, yet, people there treated him badly. Therefore, he turned into the larvae of a mosquito thus causing his rebirth. This version of the story leads clearly into the direction to Medegeĭ pélau (see story 197 and Itúngěl bai a Imelĭk. It is also said, that he came from the west. The memory of Golungīs is well preserved in Ngeaur. People like to sing the following verses.

- | | | |
|---|--|---|
| 1 | ĕ rikebĕ ² , ĕ dĕmĭu ³ ra Golungīs
amaráel osisĭk ⁴ a gabagĭl
e mora golókl ; ĕ tōba ⁵
alekóng bageĭ e lung , | Young woman, your father Golungīs goes looking for a chance to marry to Ngaregolóng. People presume, he will marry |
| 5 | alekóng bageĭ e láng | they presume he is already married. |

This chant refers to the perception that, according to another version of the story, Golungīs went to Gólei to look there for a wife. After he had succeeded, he returned to Ngeaur, because he realized that she did not love him, but only desired his wealth. The following is another verse of the dance; it refers to the girl’s greed for good things, without being willing to bear the unpleasant side, too:

- | | | |
|----|---|---|
| 6 | ĕlē ke sióuketúi ra Golungīs
e di mang a galdĭl ; ⁶
ma galdĭl a sauám ,
a kersĕl komouketúi rengĭ ; | yes, yes, you really hate Golungīs,
yet, you eat his things;
yes, his things you want
yet, you (pl.) hate his penis on him |
| 10 | ma gamalél ⁷ a sauám ,
a kersĕl komouketúi rengĭ . | yes, you want his betel nut chew,
yet, you (pl.) hate his penis on him. |

Story 171. The Canoe That Capsized In The Strait.

log.: bai 22 IV^a, bai 47 VI^a illustr. d.-pl. 28 f, bai 64 VI^b(shark), bai 65 III^b, bai 107 IV^a, (bai 112 I), bai 122 V^b, bai 125 VI^b, bai 133 III^b, bai 136 III^b illustr. d.-pl. 22^f.

¹ in bai 52 IV^b women are in the taro patch, supposedly working for Iluókl. and his wife. While they work gurugúr=crabs jump high and men beat them.

² gekebil girl.

³ gadám father.

⁴ osĭk to look for; si is an infix strengthening, as for instance siouketúi.

⁵ rare expression for argád.

⁶ galéd the catch of a fishing trip, sea stuff; here it is used for provisions in general.

⁷ gamágĕl the betel nut chew

One day, Ngirakamril sailed from Ngarakeúkl, on Peliliou, to Ngeaur. However, en route a storm broke the rigging and the canoe capsized. Help came too late. People perished and the canoe went adrift log.: bai 139 V^b.

Story 171a. How The Ngeaur-People Tried To Get Rid Of Their Oppressors.

In the old days, a Ngeaur was very poor and was the slave of Goréör. It was very much dominated by the arrogant Goréör-people. Therefore, they send for some medicine from Ngabiúl in Ngaregolóng, its consumption should make them all strong and courageous. They filled a wooden vessel with it and placed it in the village. Yet, only one man, called Bádil dared to drink from it. He said: When a canoe with people from Goréör comes and they want to get some bai-girls, then we will kill the people. —Soon afterwards, two canoes came. At once Bádil went to the shore welcoming the people. They tied the ropes around his neck and demanded money from him, which he handed over to them. Then he told them: Just take the mongol and leave again. — This they did and sailed away. All the other people on a Ngeaur were outraged and, without drinking the medicine, they declared to be ready to attack at the next possible opportunity these impertinent guests. Finally this happened. When the canoes came once again to Ngeaur, they attacked the people from Goréör and killed three men. They also lost two, so that nothing essentially was achieved and their oppression remained existent. Only with the help of a Spanish ship this dependency was abolished.

Story 172a. The Galidĕgád a Ugér‘rekemúr I gadéng From Ngeaur¹.

log.: bai 135 IV^a^{a. b} illustr. d.-pl. 23^a, blowhole: bai 107 IV^a, bai 109 IV^a illustr. d.-pl. 23^a, bai 122 IV^b.

Once a Ugér‘rekemúr, Rubak I from a Roĭs on Ngeaur, hosted a big feast, therefore, he said to the Keklau-people, who lived on Ngeaur, to catch a shark for his feast. They agreed and prepared a small rope. When a Ugér‘rekemúr saw this, he said: The rope is too small, this is not for a big shark! — The people, however, replied, they would manage with it. — Then the rubak said to them: Very well, if you catch a big shark, I will buy it. — He added: When do you want to sail out at sea. — They replied: Tomorrow!

The next day, people really left to catch a shark. The rubak followed them and turned into a shark. The fishermen had already caught one shark, but when they saw the second fish, they once again cast out the rope, the fish caught it and bit through it. Then he took with him what was left, swam back to the shore, turned again into a human being, and placed the end into his house.

Afterwards, because he had a sore throat, he fell asleep. In the afternoon, the fishermen returned and reported they had not caught any shark. He asked them to enter his house. There they recognized the rope as their own. Only now they brought the shark they had caught and asked for their payment. The rubak, however, opened his mouth wide and they saw it full of shark teeth and ran away. They turned to the north coast and out of anger they created the blowhole Tiai (see Ngabĕángĕd, Vol. 2). Later on, a man from a Imeúngs widened it and, therefore, it does not function any more properly.

The Keklau-people moved away to the north. Later on, when they came to Ngeaur, they considered it their right to take away everything they could get hold of.

Story 172b. Dira rois From Rois And The Rooster.

log.: bai 150 IV^b.

One day, Dirarois, a woman from a Rois on Ngeaur, went to the water hole, in order to water some kernels of the poisonous riámĕl-fruit for two days so that she could eat them. At this time, a big rooster came from the west.

¹ Also a certain Ugér‘rekemúr I gai “master of the haddock’s tail” is mentioned in story 3, see d.-pl. 23a

Story 172b. Dira rois From Rois And The Rooster.

log.: bai 150 IV^b.

One day, Dirarois, a woman from a Rois on Ngeaur, went to the water hole, in order to water some kernels of the poisonous riamēl-fruit for two days so that she could eat them. At this time, a big rooster came from the west. It had been sent by Galid spirit a Ugēlngabárd and landed in Ngatutk, a landing place to the west of the settlement. It was so strong that it knocked over everything that blocked its way, houses, trees, and so on. When the woman noticed the rooster, she hid in the cave Íí ra umēī, after she had laid out the riamēl-kernels along the path. The rooster ate them and perished soon afterwards. The woman, who from now on had the name Dira malk V, called her children and they dragged the rooster into the village, where it was eaten.

Story 173a. Catching Souls In Ngeaur.

(rul omdegām a delép “They Are Catching Souls”).)

log.: bai 7 VII^b, bai 18 IV^a a. V^b, bai 65 VII^a illustr. d.-pl. 23^b, 135 VI^a, delép: bai 83 III^{a a,b}, bai 86 II^a, bai 88 IV^a, bai 91 VI, bai 143 III^b.

On the southwestern shore of Ngeaur is the place where the souls celebrate their feasts, before they proceed to the underworld. One day, some men from Ngeaur went fishing and passed the waterhole ¹ Garangákl. Suddenly they heard the splash of water and when they looked around, they were well aware that the water was boiling, but nobody who could have caused this. Water was shooting up with such a force, that the border of the waterhole got wet. People presumed that souls from the nearby beach Ngēdelóg were up to their tricks, and at once, they hurried to rubak Golungīs in Ngarapelau, who knew a lot about spirits. They wanted to learn the mangālil-magic from him, which would enable them to catch souls. He was willing to teach them, took a coconut, broke it, and showed them how it was done. In the end he said: If you catch a delép, you really have to hold onto it, do not let it loose, no matter what animal it might turn into.

— When night fell, the men took coconut kernels, roasted them, and put some pieces into their ears ², so that their human odor would be covered by the smell of the roasted nut, which pleases the spirits. In this fashion they went to the waterhole, surrounded it, and waited for day to break, when the souls arrived. They heard them walking down and springing into the water, without seeing anything. At once, all of them jumped into the water and tried to catch them, but the souls escaped above. One man, called Ngivál, suspected so, jumped up, and was lucky to get hold of a soul.

He fell with it into the water and was thrown back and forth by the strong spirit, so that he had to shout for help. Then the other ones sized it and held the spirit fast. When it realized that it could not escape, it turned into a mangerengér-sea snake, and since this proved to be useless, it turned into a bersóiög-boa snake, which is very much feared by Palauans. However, they did not loosen their grip, even when the spirit suddenly turned into a green ngúiēs-tree snake and afterwards became a kamairs-mangrove snake. Finally, when all these efforts were in vain, the delép turned into a kiúiēd-starling ³. Yet, this one also could not escape from them. They took it home and, later on, brought it to a Idid in Goréōr. People flocked there to see the remarkable bird. Later on, when it died, they smoked it and kept it for a long time, until it fell apart. This happened about 100 years ago.

Story 173b. Maleitau’s Adventure.

log.: bai 21 III^b a. VI^a illustr. d.-pl. 23^c, bai 24 VII^a, bai 25 IV^a, bai 27 VII^b, bai 51 IV^a, bai 72 e, bai 74 VII^b,

¹ diósog “pond”, a transition to the bathing place diong.

² not ear canals.

³ According to KUB. V, p. 8, a man tried to get the spirit of his wife back, which he finally took home with him in form of a starling. He tied it down at one leg, but the bird wrested itself free, leaving one leg behind.

bai 81 II^a, bai 83 VII^b, bai 97 w, bai 105 VII^a a. ^b, bai 109 IV^a, bai 118 III^b, bai 128 III^a illustr. d.-pl. 29^b.

Maleitau died on Ngeaur, and his soul flew to Ngēdelóg, where he saw many delép, the so-called arungád, working hard to erect a huge trunk of driftwood. He started to sing and pulling in a body the souls managed to put up the tree. He also saw the ngas-ironwood tree there, which stuck in the sand without roots. It was called a rúl ngas, after the sting ray rúl, because it spread really flat. Around 1890, a flood wave carried it away. The souls were playing with it.

Story 173c. Godebísēg From Blai a Ikiláng.

log.: bai 141 V^a.

went one day to the bush to gather pandanus-leaves. There he met a group of delép, who were just then celebrating a feast. Taken by surprise, they gave him a wooden bowl filled with taro to take home. Yet, on his way home, they again took away the tóluk and broke it. They also took away the taro, so human beings should not see that the delép were better off, otherwise they would prefer death to life.

Story 173d. Kalkal’s Adventure.

log.: bai 82 VI.

Kalkal from Ngasiás on Peliliou had the power to see the souls, which he visited on his island at the place of the souls called Ngamrúr near Pkulapelú. One day, he sailed to Ngēdelóg on a Ngeaur, where the delép were celebrating a feast. He was welcomed and received a lot of taro and pork meat, served on a one-legged tóluk-bench. When he brought the food home to Ngasiás, people marveled at him.

c) Stories from Overseas.

Story 174. How Dengelei From Sóngosol Took Revenge For Inconvenience Suffered On Ngeaur.

log.: bai 7 V^b, bai 13 VIII, bai 25 V^b, bai 35II^a, bai 55 II^a, bai 62 II^a illustr. d.-pl. 23^d, bai 67 VII^b illustr. d.-pl. 23^d, bai 69 VI^b, bai 106 II^b, bai 138II^a.

Every day, Gerebūk, the son of a Ugélkedmúkl, went from Ngeaur to Ngēdelóg to cut palm wine there. Then it happened that each morning his bowls were missing. He was pondering a way to catch the thief and asked the wife of a Ugélkedmúkl. She gave him a blábuk ¹-stick, which she had furnished with magic and which had to be tied at the bottom of the palm trees, on which the coconut shells were hanging. Once the thief climbed up the trunk, the palm tree separated above the stick. The upper part of the palm rose so high that the person up there could not come down to the ground.

In the evening, the man fastened the stick onto it, and on the following morning, when he came to look, he recognized Dengēlei from Sóngosol, the island south of Palau, otherwise called Sónserol. He was on the palm tree floating above the ground. In fear the thief shouted: Do not kill me, take me as your servant!

— Hereupon the victim of theft removed the magic stick, so that Dengēlei could climb down. Now Ugélkedmúkl took him in his house as his servant, but he did not treat him well. Usually he got only fish bones to eat. Thus, the foreigner pondered how he could return to his home island. He carved a school of gorvidēl-trevally fish from the gadēpsúngēl (crataeva tree) wood, told his master about his plan, and invited him to come along. a Ugélkemúkl replied: ng diak! ng maráel a segség ra bai re Bég ma ngak maráe? no! does the gecko go to bai re Bég, and I should go?— Thus, Dengelei decided to sail alone. In a basket he had the fish heads he had kept from his food, which he now took with him. His hosts gave him some provisions. With all this he went on board of a canoe, put his wooden fish into the water, which dragged him with magic power to his island.

¹ a young hibiscus stick, without its bark, see also story 14 about a Tmēlogod.

After his arrival on the shore of Sóngosol, he rang the gongesmól-bell that consisted of a coconut shell, to get the attention of his people. They came at once, brought him home, and cleaned him with warm water. They took care of him, because he was a wealthy man there.

After some time he sent his fish back to Ngeaur̃ with the order that when meeting Ugélkedmúkl on a fishing trip, they should hold on to his fishing line and drag him and his canoe to Sóngosol. This they did. When they arrived, they rang the bell with their tails. Dengeleĩ came down and brought Ugélkedmúkl home, washed him, cared for him, and gave him a lot of good food. After some days, Dengeleĩ said: My father, I thought the gecko never went away?

— a Ugél did not reply, yet, soon afterwards he asked to return to Ngeaur̃. Dengeleĩ fulfilled his wish, got everything ready for the trip, gave him a lot of food, and gave him an additional bundle of mats with the following words: Here is something rare. When you arrive at home, gather all your relatives and open it! — After a Ugélkedmúkl arrived happily on Ngeaur̃, he gathered his relatives and opened the bundle. Inside he found a basket with the fish bones he had given on a daily basis to Dengeleĩ. Then he and his family were ashamed.

Story 176. Trouble Because Of Fire.

log.: bai 52 VI^b illustr. d.-pl. 23^c, bai 110 V^b illustr. pl. IX^c.
(see Dutch legends JOHANN W. WOLF, Brockhaus-Leipzig 1843, Nr. 407:
“The Extinguished Fire Of Audenaerde”, more in part IX^a).

Once upon a time, the son of a king lived somewhere in a foreign land and somewhere else a daughter of a king. With the help of a flying dragon, the young man sent her a letter, which she received and answered. She informed him that she reciprocated his love, and that he should come at night, then she would welcome him. When he came and was about to climb the ladder to her house, she pulled it halfway up and let it drop again, so that he fell off and broke his bones. His people cared for him, and, when he had regained his health, his father, the king, took away all the fire from the people of the other king, and he wrote them: When your king’s daughter does not provide you with fire from her behind, you will have to perish. — She had to do this, and in this manner people got their fire back.

Story 177. The Punished Thief.

log.: bai 36 I.

A man was constantly stealing tobacco from a white man’s plantation in Manila. Therefore, this one had a puppet erected there, which was made of charcoal. At night, when the thief came and stole a lot he saw the dark figure and said to it: you can help me carrying. — But he did not get any reply. He became angry, jumped on him, and got stuck. In this manner the owner caught him and whipped him.

Story 178. The Greedy Relatives From Yap.

log.: bai 36 VII^b, stone money: bai 127 III^b illustr. d.-pl. 23^f.

A man died in Gadjbar on Yap. When he was dead, his relatives came and wanted to take away everything. Then the son took his dead father’s penis into his hand and shouted: For whom did this one work, for you or for my mother? Thus, they were mortified and returned everything. Yapese people came to Palau since the old days to break their stone money in the caves of the Gogéal rocks. (more about this in MÜLLER Yap vol. 1 pl. 37-39).

Story 179. The Drifting Of The Mógěmog-People.

log.: bai 41 II^b illustr. d.-pl. 24^a.

During a typhoon, 2 men drifted in a canoe to an uninhibited coral island. Each one of them had his child on board. There, they waited a long time for favorable winds to sail home. They made a spell with palm fronds,yet, neither could agree about the time nor the direction. Therefore, they decided to exchange their children and to sail in different directions, to the east and the west. However, one of them perished in the ocean and was eaten by a crab, the other one, together with the child, was carried by a bird and brought to Yap.

Story 180a. What Happened To The English Man Alik on Ngaregúr.

log.: bai 31 IV^a illustr. d.-pl. 22^c, bai 36 IX^a illustr. d.-pl. 31ⁱ, coconuts: bai 26 V^a illustr. d.-pl. XIV 27.

A men’s club had found a dead dugong and brought it to the shore of the island Ngaregúr, where a trader, called Alik, was living. He wanted to have the cervical vertebra that is used as a bracelet, however the men did not want to part with it. Thereupon Alik got his Yap-men and his gun that was stored on his trading station. But one of the Palauan snatched the gun away from him and, although one of the Yap-man had jumped on top of the dugong, he was tied to the tail and dragged to the ocean, from where the Yapese had to swim back to shore. The men’s club dragged the mesekiu with its canoe to Ngaregolóng, where it was offered to the galid spirit of Ngabiúl. Later on, Alik got his gun back. He travelled from Palau to Voleaĩ, where he was slain by a man from Sónsorol.

Story 180b. Captain Holcome

log.: bai 26 III^a, bai 28 IV^a illustr. d.-pl. 24^b, bai 69 IV^a illustr. aqu. sheet 6^f, bai 71 IV^b, bai 99 V^a, bai 107 VI^a Lived on Yap and had his house there. One day, he came by canoe to Palau, together with Yapese sailors, among them also the man Remokot. Here he recruited some more sailors. Rubak Ngiragětet and a man called Mútulong went along. The ship then sailed into the region of New Guinea to get copra and trepang from there. When the captain went on shore in one of his canoes, it was attacked by black people and he was killed. Mútulang escaped because he was plunging into the water, while Ngiragětet had remained on board of the ship. There, he caught the spears that were thrown at him, in the Palauan fashion,¹.

d) Animal Stories.

Story 181. How The Crab In The kikói-Shell (kmil a kikói) Became King.

log.: bai 4 V^b illustr. d.-pl. 24^c, bai 73 II^b, bai 91 III^b.

An old snake lived in the vicinity of a village in a foreign land. She ate everything she could get hold of, she even devoured houses together with the people and only one old woman was left. This one got pregnant and gave birth to a son, who grew up fast. He caught fish and crabs for his mother. One day, he found a kikói-shell with a small kmai-crab, which he raised. It grew rapidly and could talk. So one day it asked: Are we alone here? — Yes, replied the boy, the big snake, down in the bush, devoured everyone else! — The crab continued: Go and bring the snake here!

— The boy, however, was afraid. Soon afterwards, both of them went to the end of the village and whistled. When the snake heard the call, she sent her children, two red worms, to investigate the significance of this noise. The crab went alone to meet them, it grabbed one of them, killed it and threw it behind itself, then the other one. When the mother snake came, the crab attacked it, biting its jaw, so that it died. At once, voices were heard from the interior of the snake, which begged to be saved. However, the crab shouted: You stay inside until the snake is dead, then you shall die with it. — Yet, those inside begged so sincerely to be freed that the crab asked: What will you give me? — Inside the king replied: You shall be king and everyone shall serve you. — Then the crab agreed and cut the snake open, so that everyone, who had been devoured by the snake, came outside. Thus the kmil a kikói became king.

Story 182a. The Carcinus-Crab From Galáp

(gamáng ra ivěgběbúng) log.: bai 1 V^b illustr. d.-pl. 24^e.

¹ see Vol. 3, d.-pl. 29f; about Holcome see part IX^a.

A gamáng-mangrove crab from Galáp lost its legs in the surf of Ivëgëbëbúng. Now it rowed with the fins of its hind legs to the south in order to ask a medicinal healer in Ngarebökú for help. When it arrived at the big hole Ngápsang in Keklâu, the local gamáng-mangrove crab asked: Where to! — When the Galáp-crab announced its intention, the one from Ngápsang said: I will fix it! — It made a small hole into the sand of the beach in which he placed the patient and cared for it until its legs had grown log.: bai 47 IV^b illustr. d.-pl. 24^e, bai 98 V^b.

Story 182b. The Stranded Boxfish.

It is said, that when a karamasūs gets caught on dry land and one can hear its grunting, then it is calling for the crabs to get it back into the water. (see story 14.)

Story 183. The Moray Eels In The Forked Stone

(kesebökú ra matáng l bád.¹.)

log.: bai 48 V^b illustr. d.-pl. 24^d, bai 71 II^b, bai 79 IV^b, bai 87 II^a, bai 98 V^a, bai 99 VII^a, bai 109 II^ba. III^a , bai 110 VI^b and VI^b; see also A. B. MEYER’ 81, pl. 4, row 8.

Two moray eels lived in a stone in Ngamedelím nearby Golei. The stone had openings in two different directions. They could not reach each other and eventually found out that their tails had grown together. So they agreed that each one in turn had to yield to the other. In this manner, they were on good terms, could live and thrive. The story about Kesebökú ra Golóug in Vol. 2, has the same meaning.

Story 184. The Race Of The Needlefish And The Hermit Crab.

log.: bai 109 III^b a. VII^a, bai 119 IV^a illustr. aqu. sheet 35^g, bai 122 V^a, bai 125 II^b, bai 127 gk III illustr. d.-pl. 24^f, bai 151 br.

One day, the needlefish sěkós said to the hermit crab kum: Why are you always sitting quietly, while I am running back and forth to my food? — It replied: What do you want? I am running faster than you! — The sea needle laughed and said: Very well, tomorrow we will have a race. — The hermit crab agreed. At night, however, it sent a message to all its brothers to help it and to take turns during the race. As soon as one shouted kum, another one should take its turn. This they did. When the fish arrived in Ngaregolóng and still saw the crab, he wanted to take a short cut and jumped overland to reach the western coast. Doing this, its pointed mouth hit the trunk of a pandanus, got stuck in it, and he died. A woman found it there.

Story 185. The Trees That Were Friends.

log.: bai 15 D III^b illustr. frott. 84, bai 55 IV^b, bai 66 II^a illustr. d.-pl. 25^a, bai 75 VI^a, bai 94 II^a illustr. pl. XIV 26, bai 98 IV^b, bai 128 V^a, bai 151 IV^b.

People from Ngarebökú looked for a large ridge beam for a house. They found one in Rois pelú, a kě̂lâu-tree (ironwood) that stood together with a roro (Erythrina). The roro was its friend. It saw how his friend’s branches were cut off and how the trunk was carried away. Therefore, it followed its friend. It looked for a long time until it found it in Ngameskáng. When the kě̂lâu saw its friend, it started crying and came out of the roof, so that people, who were building the house, died because of the shock.

Story 186a. The Fishes’ Fight With The Taro.

log.: bai 48 s. illustr. pl. II^d a. Vol. 5, illustr. 6, bai 90 III^a, bai 102 II^b.

The fish and the taro plants were fighting which one of them was the stronger one. The fight went this way and that, without any decision being reached. Then the fishes hired the black Pen shell (Pinna-sebúüſ) to creep and cut the stem from the roots with its sharp edge. Thus, the taro lost.

¹ see the stone in story 30a; also Kesebökú re gúr. as per Ngaregúr

Yet, the kim-Tridacna shell did not help the former one, but was always lying around, asking for news. When it also asked the stingray rul, it got angry and shouted: Why are you lying around like an old woman and why don’t you fight with us? — Then it stung the kim and, therefore, there is an egg ngáis in the kim. The kim, however, called the gal’lebesói-coral reef fish and the bannerfish karamamedú, to bring Ugél ra másäg in Ngaramásäg the message about its injury. They set off at once, yet, on the way they came across a trunk of driftwood, which the surf on the beach moved up and down. They wanted to swim underneath, but they were caught and flattened, and this is the reason, why these fish are so flat. They returned to the kim and lamented their misfortune. The tudíp-crab heard this and said: I can go and tell him.

— Thus, the kim sent this crab to Ugél ra másäg. When it came to the piece of driftwood, it jumped over it and safely reached the place and reported the accident. Ugél ra másäg sent the crab back with the following message: Tomorrow I have a betel nut palm cut down and have spears made from it. When they are finished, I will let you know! — The shrimp reported to the kim and this one sent back this message: At full moon bring all canoes with the spears to the reef Goirúl, then I will give you orders!

When the canoes came at the appointed time, the kim said: Line the canoes abreast and punt up the coast. — This they did and at the time of the full moon, they found the rúl-sting rays on the Goirúl reef, looking for food. People speared them and all canoes were filled with them. Then they returned to the kim and reported it. Kim was satisfied and said: Very well, eat them and sell them, though, not for big pieces of money, only for small ones! — Therefore, the stingray is a cheap fish, because not more than one mora trúüug ¹ is paid for it.

Story 186b. The Crab From Ngaramásäg.

In Ngaramásäg is a big channel, into which 4 creeks flow. There, underneath the bridge of the village lived the crab But l káep, which desired to feed on human beings. It had a friend, a galid spirit by the name of a Iegád, whom it asked for help. This one also took his bath in the water where the crab lived. He tempted the people of the village to bathe with him. In this manner, the crab caught and ate them. After the inhabitants of the village noticed this, they attacked both of them and beat them to death. The waterfall madál a iegád in Gongodogül has its name from the spirit.

Story 186c. How People Learned To Catch Stingrays

(síkěs a goirúl).

log.: bai 59 II^a illustr. d.-pl. 24^f, see also A. B. MEYER ’81 pl. 5, row 6.

In the old days, people feared the rul-stingray and did not dare to catch it. One day, the kim-shell sent the crab to the high chief of Ngaramásäg informing him how one had to do this, that many men, armed with spears, had to be sent out, then the rul could easily be caught. Now the rubak sent messengers all around Palau to instruct everyone, and since then people know how to catch stingrays.

Story 187a. Why The psódog-Cardinal Fish Carries the Roe In His Mouth.

log.: bai 25 II^b, bai 79 III^b.

The psódog-cardinal fish said to the kmai-crab: You cannot make me laugh! — The crab did not succeed. It then brought the jellyfish, which also had no success, the same happened to the other fish, which had been called to help. Then came the mardingáol-congrid eel, which lifted itself on its hard tail, stuck out its ears, and started to dance. Then the psódog- cardinal fish had to laugh so hard, that the roe got into its mouth and this is the reason it still carries it there.

¹ approximately equivalent to 4 M.

Story 187a. Why The psódog-Cardinal Fish Carries the Roe In His Mouth.

log.: bai 25 II^b, bai 79 III^b.

The psódog-cardinal fish said to the kmai-crab: You cannot make me laugh! — The crab did not succeed. It then brought the jellyfish, which also had no success, the same happened to the other fish, which had been called to help. Then came the mardingáol-congrid eel, which lifted itself on its hard tail, stuck out its ears, and started to dance. Then the psódog- cardinal fish had to laugh so hard, that the roe got into its mouth and this is the reason it still carries it there.

Story 187b. The Turtle And The dukl-Trigger Fish.

One day, a man from Ngaregamai̇ on Goréor, inspected the stones melógôd a bad. He had seen a turtle disappear and now was looking in all the holes of the rock for it. When he crawled into a hole underneath the water, the turtle locked the opening with its belly plate, so that he could no longer get out. In his desperation he looked for another exit and found a dukl-trigger fish. Using it as a cushion he lifted the rocks on top of him. When he reached the canoe with the fish, he smeared around its mouth some reng-curcuma, as a sign of gratitude, and put it back into the water. Therefore, the karadukl has a yellowish red mouth.

Story 188a. How Gëdëád Rescued The gorovidël- Trevally Fish.

log.: bai 5 VII^b illustr. d.-pl. 27^c, bai 26 II^b illustr. d.-pl. 25^a, bai 51 VII^a, bai 113 VI^a.

The gorovidël-trevally fish, the son of the jellyfish-mother Gëdëád devoured a kmai-crab, which got stuck in its throat. The mother sent all the fish, yet they could not help, nor the gecko and skink gamaidegëdii and meletemûtës. Finally, she authorized the echo ngerengël (lizard, see story 148) to get the conger eel mardingáol. This one danced with his ears sticking out, decorated with coconut leaves that the gecko had fetched for it. Then the gorovidël had to laugh so hard that it spit out the crab and was saved.

Story 188b. The Game Hide-And-Seek

log.: bai 13 IV^b illustr. d.-pl. 25^b, bai 82 IV^a, is played by shrimps and flatfish. The first ones hole up in-between the stones, the others bury themselves in the sand. The mesekūk-surgeon fish also participate, they swim far away, make the water murky, and hide in between the stones.

Story 189. The Fruit Bat And The Rat.

log.: bai 73 III^b.

In Ngarekeklāu stood a large lulk-fig tree, in which lived a golik, a fruit bat. A rat was crawling underneath the tree, saw the droppings of the golik, and ate them, because they tasted so delicious. Then it climbed on the lulk to ask the golik where it found the delicious fruits that made such delicious excrements. He replied: I am always flying to Ngarák, where is eternal summertime, then I come back here. — Thereupon, the rat wanted to borrow the wings, just for a short while, to taste the delicious fruits. When the golik gave the rat the wings, it flew away and never came back. Bīb, the fruit dove, which had been sent after it, also returned without any success.

Story 190. The Sharks’ Fight.

log.: bai 87 VI^a illustr. d.-pl. 25^c.

One day, the sharks in Ngurukdápël had a fight. Soon it was found out, that the mgot-fish had caused the fight by delivering false news.

Story 191. The Turtle and the Megapode.

log.: bai 1 III^b illustr. d.-pl. 25^d, bai 25 IV^b, bai 37 and bai 69 br illustr. d.-pl. 25^d.

The woman Dira sivuogiláng from Ngatmél had a turtle and a megapode. One day, while the woman was in the taro patch, both of them rummaged in the heap of ash in the house and put their eggs inside.

Upon her return the woman noticed this and chased the animals away. Both of them got really angry. The turtle went into the ocean and swam away with the megapode on its back. When the woman saw this, she grieved and called after them: bākai̇, go to Ngaregúr and stay there; and you turtle, when you lay eggs, lay them in Ngaregúr. In case someone wants to catch a uél, then the bakai̇ shall warn you! — This they did and this is the reason there are so many turtles in the vicinity of Ngaregúr. The bakai̇ broods on land, the turtle in the water, where the hen is chasing the young turtles.

Story 192. The Octopus And The búdög-Yellow-Cheeked Tuskfish.

How Tegógo’s Son Got His Hand Back.

log.: bai 2 II^b illustr. d.-pl. 25^e, bai 24 III^b, bai 35 VII^b, bai 48 III^a illustr. d.-pl. 25^e, bai 128 IV^b.

Tegógo, rubak I of Gólei, had one son, whom a moray eel had bit off his hand. Therefore, the old man sent the búdög-yellow-cheeked tuskfish, which persuaded the bukitáng octopus to retrieve with his 8 feet long arms the hand from the moray eel. Thereupon, the rubak gave his only bracelet to bukitáng. Later on, búdög yellow-cheeked tuskfish took it away and slipped it over its tail; that is why it still has one white stripe there. Tegógo, however, organized a big feast to celebrate the rehabilitation of his son.

e) Heroic Chants.

Story 193. Tělámës And the Two Galid spirit Gadabedei̇ And Gersói.

log.: bai 4 II^b, bai 12 IV^a, bai 83 VI^a, bai 103 III^a illustr. d.-pl. 25^f, bai 114 III at the bottom, bai 115 IX^a illustr. d.-pl. 26^a.

bai 125 III^a illustr. d.-pl. 29^b, bai 126^a.

Tělámës lived in the house Ngarutegóng in Ngariáp on Peliliou where he was cutting palm wine. Every day in the morning and in the evening, the spirits Gadabedei̇ and Gersói passed behind this house In the evening, they often heard Tělámës skimming the froth of the iláot-coconut syrup, then he poured some of it behind the fireplace with the following words:

molim a Gadābedei̇, kau ma Gersói! Drink Gadābedei̇, you and Gersói!

They wondered about this, how he came to know their names and, one day, they stepped into his house and asked him, “We hear you saying our names. How come you know them? Do you love us?” “Yes,” answered Tělámës, “I did not hear your names from anyone. I invented them.” From now on both of them frequently conversed with him telling him about their adventures, that, every day, they went early in the morning to the strait Gëúgël, there they went down to the bottom of the sea, where their house blai ra Gëúgël stood. Their sweethearts, the fish mámël, a big Napoleon wrasse, and a deságël, a Red tailed catfish also lived in there. Would he not like to accompany them one day? Tělámës readily agreed and when they offered him to come at once, he quickly finished his iláot-coconut syrup and accompanied them. They told him to pay attention and to step into their footsteps. He did as he was told and they went through the cave Ikilóng and then down through the water to a big lime rock, around which many fish were swimming. Both spirits shouted to them, asking why no house was there. They ordered them to quickly construct one, and then a great number of big and small fish gathered, all carrying stones to the place.

They built posts and walls and finally the roof. Thus, in no time at all, a beautiful bai was build. The three men entered and many fish assembled inside. The female mámël-fish consorted with Gadabedei̇ and the Red tailed catfish with Gersói, Tuelámës, though, remained alone. The two spirit told him to choose a female companion and he chose túrang l báng, a golden-yellow goatfish, with which he spent the night. Both spirits had told their companion to pay close attention in the morning, when their stick-like lime container ¹ was rattling, then it would be time to leave.

¹A hollow stick filled with lime in form of a powder, used for betel nut chewing.

As soon as both of them stepped out of the house, it would collapse. Thus, Tělámēs paid close attention and, in the morning, he returned safe and sound to Ngariáp, where all three of them had a drink in the house of the palm wine cutter. They agreed to have another reunion in the evening, then the two spirits left to spend the day in heaven. Yet, in the evening, when they returned to Tělámēs to pick him up for a new night trip, he did not want to accompany them. He told them he had too much work to do. In reality, he was pondering the idea to catch these many fish, which he had seen at the bottom of the sea all close together. They would be the food for a feast, which he was planning to celebrate.

In due course, he secretly collected lianas to make a net, which he finished in three days. When the spirits passed again his house, he called to them that he wanted to accompany them. Gladly they took him with them, yet, they were surprised about the bundle he carried along. He explained it was a meaningless bundle for traveling. Thus, the two unsuspecting spirits reached the bottom of the sea together with Tělámēs. Again they had the bai built and then went to sleep with their sweethearts. When all of them were asleep, Tělámēs got his net out of the bundle and stretched it across the front gable, so that all the fish on their way out swam into it, all except his sweetheart, the goatfish, which he showed another way.

However, this one also told the Red tailed catfish and the wrasse about the escape route. In this manner a great amount of beautiful fish got caught in his net. Both spirits were quite angry when they noticed it. Tělámēs did not care, but gathered his net and left in order to bring his catch to the channel of Ngariáp, where he fastened his net. Then he went to his mother and told her he wanted to hold a feast. She, however, was quite angry about such talk, because she knew well that her son, since he had no money, could not organize a feast. She had no idea about his big catch. Therefore, he went back to the channel, packed his net onto a large golegútēl-bamboo raft and sailed to Gólei, in the north of Babeldáob. There he fastened again his net and went up to Tegógo, rubak I, to offer his catch to him. He accepted it and gave Tělámēs a big piece of money, which he brought to his mother on Pelíliou, to take care of it. She was delighted and now taught her son the gólei-magic of breaking the nut omngél a leī , to break the nut, that has the power to chase the spirit away from the fish, so they cannot make the fish sick.

Doing this, the magician holds a coconut in his left hand, a gomu-stone to break it in half in the right hand, and he says:

	line:
1 ak oltúruk rekau ,Ugéliáng;	I beg you, heavenly ruler;
2 ē ak omú ra lisél ,	I break his coconut,
3 tial but ra geilagáng	this bundle of fish now.

He hands the “First One In Heaven” symbolically the catch. The chant of Tělámēs’ mother is the following:

4 e Těl ‘láng a dekiei blid rō Ngorútegóng	Tělámēs, when we live in our houses Ng.
5 ma Igílo, ma Igílang, ma Gomarabang, medi l kloál l blid r sērióu muku lag rekau meng dimerék l tekingek l kngmong ng díak sē kaspesúbēd ē alogúp, e kamatórud,	and I., and I., and G., because we only have four down there, and I taught you and talked openly, why not inform each other; instead you were angry;
10 l mogoteklí, e ngul dmángēs, l mo mokúr ra úgul a pǎlau ra Golékl ē kmerd ma kol taráo re ngí ra Gēuid l Golókl	pulled it on the rope, bringing up the coast, and you fastened at the trunk of the Palau-tree in Gólei, you jumped on shore and sold it to the seven of Ngaregolóng
13 ma Tegógo a ngāurang	and Tegógo took line:
14 ma tia ngapseklém ma tia sēkerém,	and this is your loin cloth and your necklace,

15	e m tóbēd ma mōsa garīg l líus i Ngaregolóng mē bomngásǎg re ngí, mē bomosekasau ra gasúgugál ē mēmés a keúkl ma despadál ‘l e mēs a ng dirik mlo rubak,	then go out and see the brown coconut in Ngaregolong and climb it (the palm), and squeeze yourself in-between the stems, look to the east side and the west side look for the just now elected chief, go to him and be his god. I am finished and I am just squatting and only beating my coconut fibers; I and you and you and I.
20	moborōngí mēm gēsúl, ē ngak a merekóng mak di rebórop ē di ma tētēgótog a súdek. ngak ma kauma kau ma ngak.

Tělámēs made this magic and, because of it he became wealthy and respected.

Chant 194. Heroic Chant About The Destruction Of Gurdmau.

Kesēkés ra Gurdmau

reported by the a Ibēdúl Gókebai, who was still alive in 1910, respectively by his daughters Ioulsaū and Nggeīangēl, whom he had taught the chant when they were still children. A lullaby used to lull chiefly children to sleep with these heroic reports (mangesekés). It reports about the Goreóts’ destruction of Ngardmau (see distr. III.) under Ibēdul 8 Měáng, around 1850.

1	Tad I kilie ¹ rèmetētél a Gurdmau, mārbekēu mang dimlak a klemai ² rarbikél ³ Gongodogül r ulsékēd ⁶	The rich ones of Gurdmau lived and the courageous one did not overstrain the young people from Gongodogül; e gelāgá ⁴ temedē ⁵ and today are dead, the ones who competed, and their good whispering died down; they made their way and they gave away their big pieces of money for a Idíd. You are crazy, Garuráng; Do you want to make another way?
5	ma úngil kelúlu ⁷ a mlad ; ⁸ rirül a ráel milekepóket ⁹ a bāgelél mang mo ra Idíd. e ke di dēngērengēr ā Garurá ; ¹⁰ me ko mo merül ra ngódēg ráel?
10	e kid ngomadá ra bóes e dikamko ¹¹ te metirēg re kid e te megeīgeī meklegéd ¹² l ko ra toágēl ra Dēngēs ¹³	We died because of their guns, and you did not think, that they would take care of us, and they coveted our taro patches they are (as big) as the entrance of Dēngēs;

¹ correct tē kiliei they lived, from kiei.

² noun of mésamai to be superior.

³ from búik boy.

⁴ geilagáng today

⁵ medēi dead.

⁶ olsékēd to compete.

⁷ kelulaū whisper, also for a message between chiefs.

⁸ mla mad has died.

⁹ omóket to pay.

¹⁰ Rubak II Garuráng re Ngedesīl, who had been instigated, excited by Ngiraóis in Galáp, who was jealous of Goréör; there also was a dispute because of a taro patch.

¹¹ dikakekó I did not think, dikalko er. . . .

¹² from mesēi taro patch.

¹³ the wide channel, see map 2 j 7°7’.

15 *l domóiöğ*¹ e ked e mo mesél re ngi.
*e dikamko domókêĭ*² *a bágĕĭ*³
e ma kerdeu mélebo ra mlai
*l ngarengí a Narameketí*⁴. ma Ibĕdúl *me mlengelí e lólio*⁵ Gurdmaū
*e kau e Melaikesó*⁶ ke di tal 20 déngĕrengĕr lăgád, l mangemékl *a peketél*⁷ a udóud ra re Gurdmaū
*ma re Beóug*⁸
22 *a lóngelu lúmid*⁹ ra Garurá
23 *ra lĕsengeĭ*¹⁰ *bosír ar Melemótôm*¹¹
*l lomu ra Sépekméleg*¹²
25 *e Ngivál a lutáng*¹³
*ma dengá ra Dío ra ikeam*¹⁴
*e komel’lú r gotóbĕď*¹⁵
e ngotobedél a dag
a blid a dikeá gaimóng
25 *e Ngivál a lutáng*¹⁶
*ma dengá ra Dío ra ikeam*¹⁷
*e komel’lú r gotóbĕď*¹⁸
e ngotobedél a dag
a blid a dikeá gaimóng
30 *ma pelú re Ngĕsebeĭ mǎngĕóng*¹⁹
*ma Ngrĭl go uúgel rar Midól*²⁰
*l kuk ubangerél ngerél a pelú*²¹ throwing spears across it, we get breathless.

You did not think of giving away one bágĕĭ
and to bring one kerdeu (spear) on the canoe, it is there Ngarameketí and a Ibĕdúl;
you are crying over it, Gurdmaū is cooking taro, and you Melaikesóng, you are the only foolish human being, who prevents the payment of money from Gurdmaū and of Beóg.
They are about to cry, because Garuáng hesitates and they will see, the rifles of Melemótôm, and the beating on Sépekméleg Ngivál ran back,
when we were at Dioraikeam.
You stood watch on the path
for draining the waste?
Of our houses does not (stand) any more one,
Ngivál ran back,
when we were at Dioraikeam.
You stood watch on the path
for draining the waste?
Of our houses does not (stand) any more one,
and the village Ngĕsebeĭ isconquered, and Ngrĭl is criticizing Midól, which is leading the voice of the place;

*e kosengá*¹ Gárura
*aika ludóud l’ longedúng ar Beóug*² 35 *e meng mo gosékĕď ra madál Urár*³
ko mo merul ra ngódég ráel?

People of Ngardmaū:
*e kid a ngomedá ra bóes*⁴
*a di kam nga ngeltĕď*⁵
*l mo ra Regúger*⁶ mar Melemótôm
40 *e ma Galegĭl*⁷ mārngabárd
e t oba ngerél a pelú re Goréör
*e me lengāĭ aikél mlil ngós*⁸
*l nga re Ngĕuósög*⁹
44 *e me le mé*¹⁰ ra madál a taog er Urár.
45 *mĕ mulim a kar e mngúa blolóbōĭ*¹¹
*l l móotobedí ra Ngerikedám*¹²
*melotekir*¹³ a Mad l mo ra Ngabúkĕď
*ng mǎkerakú*¹⁴ ra kélulāu
me gelĕga kemesengeĭ re mǎdám 50 *a l del’liu ra Tagukal*¹⁵
*a bengedél Gĕrungūĭ*¹⁶
e ma Itepál e mora táog Regáp
e mesékĕď ra mlil ngabárd.

Goréör is talking:
*e Ngírametánglegá*¹⁷ m kiei pelú
55 e ngak a mlo mangalil *lúmu*¹⁸ ra lei
meng merāu a lisél Gongodogūĭ trapped is Garuráng; Beóug takes care of this money competing they go to the front of Urár;

Are you making another way?

We are all dead because of the rifles.
Can’t you take our ransom and go to Regúger and Melemótôm, to Galegĭl and the western villages,
that follow to the orders of the village Goréör;
that one brings its canoes from the east;
they were in Ngĕuósög,
so that they come to the front of the channel of Urár.
That you drink syrup water and take visits of women,
take them all out to Ngerikedám, to ship them to Mad in Ngabúkĕď.
What is he doing there now because of the message,
that you will see today with your eye,
the anchorage sticks in Tagukál?
In the great war (reaches) Gĕrungūĭ from (the headland) a Itepáng to the channel Regáp;
it is full with their canoes in the west.

Ngírametánlegáng, you live on land,
I did a spell,
broke the coconut,
so that truth come through the nut over Gongodogūĭ;

¹ aulóiöğ the javelin, dǎmóiöğ javelin.

² omókĕĭ to spend.

³ A red spotted kind of kluk, like the ixora bush. When canoes of Goréör came to attack Ngardmaū, the ones who were attacked wanted to pay ransom, yet they forgot to deliver it.

⁴ the council of Goréör rubak.

⁵ melíóng to cook (taro). The meaning is: you lament the money of peace, which you were supposed to pay, therefore, you can sit still and cook taro.

⁶ The small rubak Ngiraikesúk, who tried to prevent the payment.

⁷ pókĕĭ payment of omókĕĭ.

⁸ Rubak II, ar Beóug, the council of the chiefs.

⁹ from omid to let go, when someone does not listen to an objection.

¹⁰ from omes to see.

¹¹ a men’s club from Goréör, formerly in Bai a Dngoróngor.

¹² In former times, a Bai down in Gurdmaū. People see the approaching danger, because the payment took so long.

¹³ aknga I was there, denga we were there. People from Ngivál came to help the ones from Gurdmaū, lumūt to return.

¹⁴ The bathing water (diong) down on the road.

¹⁵ from otóbĕď take a leak, this means: did you guard the path to go to the toilet.

¹⁶ aknga I was there, denga we were there, see language. People from Ngivál came to help the ones from Gurdmaū, lumūt to return.

¹⁷ The bathing water (diong) down on the road..

¹⁸ from otóbĕď take a leak, this means: did you guard the path to go to the toilet.

¹⁹ from ngu to take.

²⁰ the council of Ngĕsebeĭ, a village nearby Ngardmaū that currently is extinct, and that Ngrĭl also helped.

²¹ óbang to hold fast, to guide, obangerél his leader, kuk, then; ngerél from ngor the mouth.

	ng beıl gokdemelék ¹ l kılai ² , re ngı lulekódir ³ ra Gurdmaı̃.	it is revenge for my ancestor, that I take, they killed him in Gurdmaı̃.
60	meng di ngiues l ngara Idid ⁴ me tedim ⁵ lé a melaı̃rengı̃ a re moi Bedıl ra garagár meng dimlak a ngu ea ⁶ Regúgěr l ta lágád a ngu, ma rengıl dóuei	This is a story for a Idid, that they always wanted to take for him, they went to Bedıl earlier, that they did not conquer it, until Regúgěr, the one man, took it , and he was satisfied in his heart,
65	meng me mangelıl lumu ra lei meng meraı̃ a lisél Gongodogıl̃	he did a spell, broke a nut so that truth would come through the nut over Gongodogıl̃.
	e Garurá, me ko mogu ⁷ melaı̃ a tokói ra Ngiraiué̃t ⁸ l kmo ruk ra Goréör ediëruı̃, ediëdei ě diak armoklóu ⁹	Garuráng, you are about to get some advice for Ngiraiué̃t to announce a dance for Goréör, only two,only three, and no older people (are there)
70	mar‘rebekeu a mlar, l di merék a Mangaulekang ¹⁰ a ngarengı̃ l kilsang mang golsagalıl a Matánglagáng ¹¹ i Ngardmaı̃ ra blekengél ma iltët re ngı̃	and the courageous ones are dead, except Mangaulekang. He was here, I have seen him, his friend from Matánglagáng in Ngardmaı̃, in his courage and in his wealth.
70	mar‘rebekeu a mlar, l di merék a Mangaulekang ¹² a ngarengı̃ l kilsang mang golsagalıl a Matánglagáng ¹³ i Ngardmaı̃ ra blekengél ma iltët re ngı̃	and the courageous ones are dead, except Mangaulekang. He was here, I have seen him, his friend from Matánglagáng in Ngardmaı̃, in his courage and in his wealth.
75	ng dí mlekámkö klemeı̃u ra Goreor	You did not think of the young people of Goréör,

¹ The story goes like this: The daughter of the high chief of a Imelık was mongol (concubine) in bai a Dnoröngěr in Goréör. She married Ngıra ngemeüsög from the old Idid-family. She, however, did not like it in Goréör, and therefore, she tried with her lies to bring her husband to leave. One day, she ran from the taro patch into the house and said that some one had been following her. He was so angry that he decided to sail with her to the north. When he went on board of the canoe at the landing place a Delui, a chief jumped unnoticed on the float of his outrigger. He only noticed him at the headland Pkurengél, and therefore, he turned around to bring him back. Then he sailed with his wife to Ngardmaı̃, where they lived from now on. Later on, the wife arranged to have her husband killed.

² ak melaı̃ I bring, ng diak kılai I do not bring, thus, here the negative form is used.

³ from omekoád to kill.

⁴ who urged for revenge; everyone who got the title a Ibědul, was thinking of conquering Ngardmaı̃.

⁵ tedim always; léa = mıa.

⁶ = aa except.

⁷ mogung to be about to do something, mogang complete.

⁸ Rubak II from Ngatpúiëg, a part of Ngardmaı̃.

⁹ *armeaĩ*people, klóu great, old, kekeréi small, young

¹⁰ the name means mangang to eat and aı̃lekanğ a present of food. The narrator reckons Goréör could only summon one or two men’s clubs for the ruk-dance, being a poor place, only boys are said to be there.

¹¹ blai V in Gurdmaı̃, fitting to the friend of the former one, see below Tmangalvíüiëd.

¹² the name means mangang to eat and aı̃lekanğ a present of food. The narrator reckons Goréör could only summon one or two men’s clubs for the ruk-dance, being a poor place, only boys are said to be there.

¹³ blai V in Gurdmaı̃, fitting to the friend of the former one, see below Tmangalvíüiëd.

a kılá ¹ meringél ma rom l kar ²

	mang díou ³ kékád a rengıl̃. ě bómtok ⁴ a mıai medėkó ⁵ dotúruk ⁶ ra Nğlas ⁷ medómě bóes ra Bekāteı̃ ⁸ ě boděšėkeui ⁹ a Dělólok me meténgel ra úgul a liúes ¹⁰ medosiúr ¹¹ a kerėuél ¹² a bikél a Gurdmaı̃
80	ma ngisél ¹³ mang di kola ¹⁴ l bedıl seregėtaiáng a Klomóděš ¹⁵ melemeı̃ e bol nğelngı̃ ¹⁶ gobakrı̃r a mede ra bóes a gáltágát ¹⁷ a di óu pelát é medkelá ¹⁸ loltilěğ loftaraĩ aikél ma klóu l bukl ě ma gaitóug l mogú ra Ngivál a lebó Remokú a kié ramadál a bai ra Iptágěš ¹⁹ metogıl ngukókl ě tóu uetkéu rě Ngı̃raiueı̃t l kmu:
85	Gárbědul a maramá mong mogú kie rekér? a dil iú ²⁰ l mo mesúřög ra iké re bedıl ra magad ²¹ ngeitėbai ě la geitá ²² băngkúr

¹ akekiláng I have eaten it, from mangang to eat.

² rom English = rum; kar medicine.

³ always.

⁴ from melikěš to travel with sticks (punt).

⁵ dėkóng closer to the destination, bědėbóng closer to what is coming.

⁶ otúruk against, this means the canoe is sailing abreast.

⁷ a place outside of the entrance to Urár, from where a klis-channel leads in. It can be navigated at low tide.

⁸ The hill Bekāteı̃, in the northern part of the village, where the galid spirit lived (see map), underneath the bush Dělólok.

⁹ from mesáko (melkesáko Wall). to crawl.

¹⁰ poet, for lıus.

¹¹ mosiúr to let two ends collide with each other.

¹² The meat, for instance from the wings of birds.

¹³ from ngais old men, women and children.

¹⁴ to dodge, for instance a throw.

¹⁵ The young people of Ngivál, Ngaragatáng a small place nearby

¹⁶ from móngol to carry on the shoulders, WALL. mengól.

¹⁷ from mengetegát to injure with a spear etc. (WALL.).

¹⁸ from medı̃kl to jump up in surprise.

¹⁹ The rubak bai from Ngaragėlğ in Ngivál.

²⁰ ımiu to pass, to pass by (towards an indicated land).

²¹ magád deaf; where you cannot hear anything.

²² goitı̃ throw it away, from mengóit; geitáng thrown away (see chant 197)

they ate pepper and the drink made of rum from the foreign land.

Therefore, they are always angry.

Punt the canoe,

we come from the opposite side of Nğlas,

we all shoot to Bekāteı̃

and then crawl to Dělólok,

here they come down to the coconut trunks,

we hit the shoulders of the boys from Gurdmaı̃,

and the ones, who do not fight, should relocate to Ngaragatáng (an extinct village).

Klomóděš come and carry their chief, who died because of the rifles wounded, with his bandage.

Jump up, trample (everything), trample flat the big hill and the ferns to go to Ngivál;

at the arrival Remokú sat at the front gable of Iptágěš;

they laughed loud

and they greeted Ngiraiué̃t and said:

Gárbědul has arrived and he will remain where?

He only passes by to arrange(the taro patch),

that one opposite of loneliness.

Let him throw away the băngkúr- taro,

100	ĕ lou dáit ¹ gongĕsímer	his taro is the gongĕsímer
101	ma l keserengĕl l ditiu arbangedákl ĕ Remokó ² mangerir l bo ltúruk ma madám l bó riou	and the keserengĕl. This is your taro, you who have been badly treated. Remokú, your mouth will beg, and your eye is lowered
105	ma sel klemāi er Uelsei ³ bomgoiti aikáng	and that presumptuousness of Uelsei. Throw away this!
Gurdmau talks:
	gātāméd ⁴ rekér? aiká mla kerĭl a metĕt lagád ⁵ ra peluál ng sóla ⁶ tokói rekau	Our land, where is it? This was the revenge of a rich man on his land. Listen to the your speech
110	ĕ m lia ⁷ uáng Lálam ma Mogúgu.	and place down like Lálam and Mogúgu.
Ngivál talks:
	ar Midól ĕ ar Ngarúto mĕ kom ulukeúkl ma k nga l mlil a ukal ’l ĕ mál sĕsákt ⁸ ĕ raIrai ma Imeliĭk	Chiefs from Ngĕsĕbei and Ngĕrutói, you come from the west side, and I take his canoe from the ukal’ l (trunk), and maybe a canoe from a Irai and a Imeliĭk,
115	mĕ lótekir ⁹ a ngisĕl gomeráog ĕ medebó desmageŕ ¹⁰ ra peluál ng di geimól ngór a ngára Gurdmau lumát ¹¹ ra gusél e mangá Gorul ’l ĕ meldóim a sás ¹²	and ship them the baggage people, who have been left; we go, we install them again on their land, and it is only one mouth in Gurdmau; he bangs on his stick-like lime container and eats the gorul’l-canoe and the tip of the bow.
Ngardmau talks:
120	ĕ uekel ’li ¹³ a mĕróng l pelú ra Ngĕsĕbei,	You overthrow him for the famous place Ngĕsĕbei,
121	liko ¹⁴ kimdi ¹⁵ re Gadág l mora Irúr e keméu ar Beóug ¹⁶ a di kam luk ¹⁷	you on your part cut off Ngaragĕdág, you go to a Irúr; yet, you ar Beóug, can’t you be silent?
125	mĕ dólăg ¹⁸ r tial pelú	We instruct this place!

¹ actually the taro shoot, poss. ditĕl, see line 102.

² Young people from Ngardmau.

³ His people talk.

⁴ from gútum the ground. The Ngardmau-people are now talking.

⁵ from Gorĕör.

⁶ sólang “stop”, but also like solae “then”.

⁷ from omeliáng to place. Lálam and Mogugú are two pieces of bagel-money from Ngardmau, one br’rak and one mongongaui.

⁸ see canoebuilding..

⁹ from olták to ship, to place on board.

¹⁰ from mesímog to reintroduce WALL..

¹¹ omat to bang on, here the stick-like lime container (gāus) on the full end, so that the lime inside is swooshing.

¹² Gorul’l, the name of the canoe, which he uses, in those days, its tip of the bow still had the Carolinian forked tail (a sas);godóim additional food, for instance meat together with taro.

¹³ okel’li from omúkel to topple, actually about the capsizing of a canoe.

¹⁴ likó something on your side, mĕmó something on my side.

¹⁵ from mengímd to cut hair.

¹⁶ the chiefs of Gurdmau see above and 34.

¹⁷ from lmuk to be silent.

¹⁸ mel’lăg to instruct.

	Gorĕör talks: ĕr ’ ra Tmangaluó ¹ kemesĕkák l kóra madál a galidĕgád aikĕ ngĕuĕlĕk ² l táger a geimó Golékl	friend Tmangalvúiĕd, you see me, like the face of a god like human being; this is my garden, ten (I have), one in Gólei,
130	ma kamángelpelú rekid ra Imeli ³ aikĕ Rĕgedúi ³ likó raikĕ ra Ngasuás aki bilkelí ⁴ ra garagár ĕr ’ ra Tmangaluó	and the long land is ours from a Imeliĭk, this Ngaragădúi, and behind you that Ngasuás, we picked them up in former times! Friend Tmangalvúiĕd,
135	kemésamai l mo ra Idid. ng tagá lokdemelém a ngilú a Imeong? ma ngerém a di metĕngáng ma madam a di oberdáng ⁵ gom ngu l mora Geiôel ⁶	you lift yourself above a Idid! Who of your ancestors conquered a Imeúngs? And your mouth you opened so wide and your eye has gotten so heavy. You brought (your people) to Geiôel,
140	ak mlo koudi ⁷ mĕ ngĕdekóng nga lmal l l ngiáog ĕ meng di metĕtóbed a gad l k Ngiramangaduáol ma Matál ⁸ a ngi lémĕd re ngi	I slowed them down, just like a school of ngiáog -fish, which flee to all sides. The man Ngiramangaduáol
145	mak mlo roudi ⁹ ma ngará bad l but mak mlo okerdí ¹⁰ ra Imeli ³ ng mo óumlai l mogu re Kledéu. e perekĕl a metágel tǒói rekid a Gurdmau lulekár ¹¹ a tegebĕl	and many Ngaramatál-people died because of it, and then I tied them like on the stone a bundle of line: I landed in a Imeliĭk, and sailing on the canoe I will arrive in Ngarkldéu; happened in expiation of bad behavior towards us, Gurdmau they instructed them about their thorns.
150	a dekié mei lul e mangadákl a tar re kemám mĕ lilekóng ng dimlĕkĕá ¹² mlúk ĕ bemdmageŕ ¹³ ra peluál? ĕa logúp ĕ komokodeŕ ¹⁴	When remained as a foreigner one of us, and came to you, then you could not be silent. Do you bring him back to his land?
155	ma rĕ ngúk a dió kekĕdeá ¹⁵ rekau	Instead you have killed him, and my heart is so angry with you.

¹ Rubak V of Gurdmau from blai Matanglagáng, see above footn. 60.

² from ngedol the garden, as which Gorĕör has been considered, as all good things flowed in there.

³ two extinct settlement sin the south of Nagrsúl on the east coast.

⁴ metkelí to lift a stone half way, which is to say here to defeat.

⁵ from goberĕved heavy, ang as at metĕu “far” indicating the completion.

⁶ a place in Ngaramlungúi. Ngardmau had been fighting against it and had been caught on the return trip by Gorĕör.

⁷ from mangáud to stop an enemy or a school of fish.

⁸ a club in Gorĕör; mlad dead, mad to die.

⁹ also mrudi, from maraud to tie shut a basket. He tied them, the dead Ngardmau-people together and brought them to Gorĕör; káud or kóud the one that hinders.

¹⁰ from olekĕrd to land; landing on the way to Gorĕör.

¹¹ from olekár to open the eyes; tagáb the spine of the fish, which is to say this should remove the scales from their eyes about their behavior.

¹² dikeáng no longer; mlĕ indicates the past time.

¹³ from sunegeŕ to bring back.

¹⁴ from omokóuad to kill.

¹⁵ kĕkád annoying.

	ng tagá sobegeklau ¹ ra gēlagá	Who is helping you now?
	ē murim ² a bēremiu ma ilkiu ³	Put away your sleeping mats and household goods.
	ailuāi ra Ivēkēāng a dós ngousekoākl ⁴	The old woman of Ivēkēāng, maybe she is crawling around?
160	a meróng l pelú	The famous place,
	ē kăphál' l ē meléel	the beautiful, the rich one,
	ē rubál, di mo deúl ⁵ a gúdēl	and the rubak, they will lie in between the grass!

Story 195a. a Ugél pelú And Ugél'lē galíd,
And The History Of Goréör (told by Rubásag VII).

The settlements a Iraī, Ngardmíd, and Ngarbagéd became bigger because of the influx from a Ugélpelú, a raised island on the eastern reef, just like Ngíptál and it was destroyed by a storm flood. Two chiefs of a Ugélpelú, known under the name of a Rēmelīk and Gobágēl bagēlsekerél⁶, were looking for a new place and came with their entourage to the entrance Ngasāksau nearby Ngarenggól, a sandy beach on the eastern side of the gogeál a Uluptágēl that is overlooking the still existing coral reef a Ugélpelú. Rēmelīk was the first who arrived and he planted a *gúiu*t, a taboo sign in form of a young coconut frond, as a sign that he occupied the place.

When Gobágēl bagēlsekerél arrived later on and found this sign, he recognized that someone had arrived before him. Therefore, he also took a coconut frond, but, before placing it at another spot, he held it over a fire, so that it would look older than Rēmelīk’s. Then he went to Rēmelīk’s hut and soon the argument arose over who had been the first one. When a Rēmelīk did not want to back down, Gobágēl bagēlsekerél showed him his coconut frond. Thus, Rēmelīk’s people let themselves be fooled and they went with him to Ngarmíd, where they founded the southern part of the place and they gave it the name of their chief. There, they lived in-between Ramagáng and Bukrairóng. In the meantime, Gobágēl bagēlsekerél and his people were not satisfied with their place. They had not much to eat and had to rob passing canoes in order to feed themselves. a Rēmelīk, too, was not satisfied and informed his former fellow countryman that he had not settled well.

Thus, this one came to Ngarmíd in the company of some young women for Bai Ngarbágēsis, in order to buy from the rubak I of the northern part, a Regeīúngēl, land for Rēmelīk’s people. Before Regeīúngēl agreed to the purchase, he sent a message to his friend Tiuángēl, rubak I of Ngarbagédasau, that was formerly situated in the north of Ngarmíd. He was asking for his advice what he should do. Tiuángēl consented, whereupon Regeīúngēl allocated to Rēmelīk’s people land in the north. Gobágēl bagēlsekerél, however, returned to Ngarenggól. This started the tradition, that in former times the daughters of Ngarbagédasau went as bai-girls to Ngarmíd.

In those days, rubak V, Kloráol, who sat in blai Ruseblūk, ruled over the eastern part of Goréör, called Gētēt. He was very much harassed by Ngarbagédasau and send a message to Gobágēl bagēlsekerél to ask for his help. This one agreed, because he reckoned Ngarmíd would not support his friend out of respect for him because of the delivery of women. This is what happened, the people from Ngarbagédasau had to flee from Klotráol and Gobágēl

¹ from mesebegákl to help.

² from merīm to put away.

³ bar mat; maybe from klálo “thing” = “your things”; also riómēl, poss. rimelél.

⁴ ousekoákl to crawl around; a Ivēkēāng is a blai in Ngardmaū; the woman supposedly crawled away during the fight. This addition came from a man of blai VII a Ingeáol in Goréör, who had been silently sitting in on the presentation of the poem.

⁵ The spacing *delú*l, between.

⁶ in KUB. I, p. 33 only a small part of the story is mentioned, Kobokobákel. The first one owns the inner part of the island with the name Mēdórōm, the last one the outer one a Tbakaī.

bagēlsekerél to Gogál’legútum, the southern part of Babldáob and their place was destroyed.

In those days, the western part of Goréör, called Ngaramangángēd, was also oppressed and it was Ngarekobasáng who did this. Rubásāg and a Ibēdul sent a message to Klotráol and Gobágēl bagēlsekerél, that after the destruction of Ngarbagédasau they should come and help against Ngarekobasáng. a Ibēdul sent the messenger Sogolóng, nr. V of a Jebúkūl to the last one. Gobágēl bagēlsekerél answered: Very well! a Ibēdul should be ready at full moon, then I will wait with a Rēmelīk at Toi ruegúio, while you challenge the enemy from the north. Thus, the war plan was executed. When people from Goréör attacked from the north, and later retreated to the east because of the superiority, Gobágēl bagēlsekerél sat attentive in the canoe underneath the rock Toi rēgúio, next to the island Malágal. This was when he dropped his gorúsóg-betel nut pounding stick, therefore, there is such a deep hole in the water. In the meantime, the warriors of Ngarekobasáng advanced from the north coast of Goréör to Cape Gētēgēti nearby a Jebúkūl, where they speared Klotráol’s son. However, when they received the message that other warriors had landed in Ngarekobasáng, they quickly returned. Soon after their return, they encountered people from Ngarenggól and with an ulóióg-spear they injured a younger relative of Gobágēl bagēlsekerél, who had still been sitting in Toi rēgúio. When his people brought the injured person, all off them returned to Ngarenggól and sent a message to a Ibēdul, that they wanted to try another attack at the following full moon. In the meantime, each one of the warriors prepared a protóg-club and a gasbógōp-board together with a stick that, when pushed into the ground, should protect the board from stones rolling down. Thus, people of Ngarenggól had conceived a new plan of attack, while the Ngarekobasang-people thought they could do just as before.

This time, Gobágēl bagēlsekerél landed with his people at new moon on the south side of the mountain Besáis, opposite of Toi rēgúio and they climbed up the embankment. However, a Rēmelīk landed opposite of Madalāi in the channel of a Il’líl and marched inland. The cave Gomáogarsagél is situated on the southern side of Ngarekobasáng. In there the so-called ngais “egg”, the camp followers, consisting of women, children and old people, had their quarters. They rolled stones onto the people climbing up, yet those caught them cunningly with the boards, so that the attackers easily arrived up there. The old women, children and the old men were felled with the clubs, so that their blood flowed down the mountain into the ocean. The young and pretty women and girls, however, were brought to Goréör as the prize of war.

The Ngarekobasáng-people fled from their island and were chased by the ones from Goréör all the way to Ngaregolóng. Rubak I Gaspángēl was captured during this chase. They brought him back to Ngarekobasáng where he was reinstalled as chief; only a rubak from Goréör was placed at his side as nr. 2 Góbakraiuóng and magistrate. Gaspángēl paid a big piece of money and sent an úlog of bai-girls to Goréör and a Ibēdul sent him a high ranking girl from the house a Idíd, in order to link him to himself. As already mentioned, after the fight Gobágēl bagēlsekerél brought the captured women and girls to Goréör to serve there as mongol. The old women, children and the old men were felled with the clubs, so that their blood flowed down the mountain into the ocean. The young and pretty women and girls, however, were brought to Goréör as the prize of war.

He landed in the channel Săgāmús and wandered from there up the road to the main path, where the iliud-pavement Sagalagóng is situated. There, he delivered the girls to Meketí, the community of chiefs, and performed together with his people a dance on the pavement. a Ibēdul sent a message to the dancers. He informed Gobágēlbagēlsekerél that he wanted to send him also an úlōg for his úlōg. This one, though, refused, stood up and shouted: úasagaláia¹, gomdílu di mdúng = Oh man, what you should have said, you do not say².

¹ the word can also come from ougólei “to charm”, see Vol. 3, p. 344.

² this is approximately the meaning. WALL. gom when you ... hypothetically; di is obviously the same as diak! see also Vol. 2, language, verbs. “to say” dmung.

He brought the answer to Ibēdul, whereupon this one offered money, but got the same reply. Then a Ibēdul replied: ak mo kerengém = I will be your slave; when you come to Goréōr, you can do whatever you want. For instance, if you want to take an already married woman, you are free to do so. — Gobágēl bagēlsekerél, though, refused with the same words.

Rubak VII Rubásāg had heard these talks. He went to a Jegád ri bükül, today’s Melimaráng I of Ngarbagéd, and he asked him, “what did a Ibēdul promise, when he asked you to destroy the oppressor?” He replied, “he promised us a plot of his land.”

When Gobágēl bagēlsekerél had danced a night and a day on the ilíud Sagalagóng, they finally understood the meaning of his actions and of his words. Rubásāg asked a Ibēdul: Don’t you recall any more what you had promised? — Then the high chief remembered again. He informed the dancer. All my land is occupied. Choose yourself a place, where you want to live! — Then the Ngarenggól-people stopped dancing and discussed what they should do. After a Ibēdul had twice requested an answer, they told the messenger: It is ok! — Then they started once again to dance and continued until after midnight. Then, however, they sat down and got ready for the fight. They had decided to chase the people from Desekéł ¹ away from their settlement. Rióbog, their rubak I, was hated everywhere, since he had planted a lag-flag on the small hill Bukl ar Desekéł, that had been thrown up for his house, so that everyone, coming home from fishing, had to deliver a part of his catch to him. While Gobágēl bagēlsekerél stayed on the ilíud, his people advanced to Desekéł and chased away the inhabitants. A part of them was killed and a part was chased into the gogeál rocks. They placed their gúíūt-taboo signs into the taro patches, on the trees, and on the houses, in short each one of the people took possession of whatever he liked. They did not think of their chief, who had to content himself with the taro patch Ngatúrur, where today the well is situated, and with the hilly terrain a Jesógol above it ².

He did not say anything about this behavior and remained there as a galíd spirit, the Ugél‘lëgalíd. They called the “new settlement” bagés l pelú, today’s Ngarbagéd. a Ibēdul tried to placate him. He said to him: You shall be my younger brother and shall rule next to me. My people shall not wear the comb in front of you, I will not use a long lime stick in your presence, and I will not be painted red, when I come into your presence. —Gobágēl bagēlsekerél, however, disappeared and did not come back in person.

Instead of him Ngirataulbük appeared ³. He was a highly respected priest. People said the following about him: Ngirakerekúr of blai III was a relative of the invisible Ugél‘lëgalíd. One day, he ordered his sons and the arugelél “his helping spirits”, to ready a canoe to sail to Ngarenggól. To be specific, on this very day the roof of the bai was thatched. Ngirakerekúr, though, left the work and sailed with his people to Cape Ngaremediú. When they arrived there, people in a canoe from Ngaregamāi saw how Ngirakerekúr and all the others, except one son, fell down and spit blood, because Gobágēl bagēlsekerél, being angry with their laziness, had pushed them. From here the galíd spirit flew to Ngirataulbük in Ngarbagéd, who was his first priest there. When he thus fully aware of the accident, he ran to the channel, where the rubak of the settlement were working and he shouted: Why are you sitting here? Before long a blebáol ⁴-present will arrive. — He then hurried back to his blai, where the galíd spirit left him again and he could peacefully cut his palm wine. In a little while, the rubak saw a canoe arriving with several dead bodies, they received them and buried them.

¹ see Ngarbagéd, Vol. 2.

² see below the end the of the story.

³ blai Taulbük belongs to blai III Kërĕkúr.

⁴ generally a head trophy is called like this.

Around this time Ngardmāu, where a young man of the a Idíd-family of Goréōr had been killed, was conquered for the 7th. time. Ngirataulbük ran there, speared seven men from Goréōr, cut off an ear from each one of them and put all seven ears in his mouth. In this fashion he flew back to Ngërupesáng, where he cut his palm wine. Yet, he soon flew back to Ngardmāu, where people of the settlement bragged they had killed seven warriors, who were still lying there. Then he took the ears out of his mouth and placed them next to the bodies. When the priest of Ngardmāu saw this, he took his triton shell and gave it to him. On his way, on the grassland all the way into his house Goeáol Ngirataulbük blew it, as a sign of his priesthood. Ngërupesáng is also a place of a Ugél‘lëgalíd. It happened like this:

Once upon a time, Gobágēl bagēlsekerél moved with his people from Ngarbagéd up the east coast. They had a big mangidáp-net with them to catch mĕkĕbúd, a sardine like kind of fish. They came to Dagĕdeagĕl, the landing place of Ngĕráměs nearby Melekéiok. In those days Tĕmakāi, rubak II (today rubak XI), and Sagaruleóng, rubak I (today rubak V) ruled in that place. They stayed several days in Dagĕdágĕl, because they caught many fish there, and at once they sent the fish in their canoes to Ngarbagéd. One day, a young daughter of Tĕmakāi came to the beach to get some salt water. Gobágēl bagēlsekerél asked her what for she needed it, and she replied: For the preparation of demok-taro cabbage. We have no fish, because all our men have to fight.

— With the following words he gave her a basket filled with fish: a udogúl ma gĕuid. — The girl told her father this saying, without understanding it, and who had given her the fish, and that the chiefs on the beach ate the fish without any taro. Tĕmakāi distributed the fish to all the houses and sent taro as a gift in return down to the beach. Those on the beach were so happy, that they sent all the other fish. Then they asked why there were so many fights. Now Tĕmakāi went there himself and told them how his place Melekéiok was constantly besieged by Ngarevíkl, Golívĕg and Ngĕbúrĕg. Gobágēl bagēlsekerél asked: What do you give me when I free you of everything? — Tĕmakāi replied: I give you the land of Ngërupesáng.

— Then the first one sent for canoes and people and many came. Golívĕg came just to vent his exuberant spirits on Melekéiok. Then Gobágēl bagēlsekerél chased them away and attacked on the same day with his own fleet all three places and destroyed them. After that the fighters went to the stone pavement of Melekéiong and danced for a long time. Every time when a message came that did not suit them they replied just like in Goréōr: ũasagaláia gom dílu dim dung!, until Tĕmakēi gave them the land Ngërupesáng, of which they took possession at once. Once again, the same as in Desekéł happened, the high chief was missed out and received the worst plot of land called Goeáol, situated completely in the taro swamps. Still, there were not yet enough people there, and therefore, they got the young generation in form of young people from Ngarbagéd, who were supposed to take over the titles and positions of Ngërupesáng. This is still practiced today. Young ones from Ngarbagéd, called a Tumúk, take the titles and positions of Ngërupesáng, their people are called ar Meltél. Therefore, many titles are the same in both places and both villages have the same god a Ugél‘lëgalíd. Therefore, Ngarbagéd and Ngërupesáng always are the messengers in the wars of Goréōr against Melekéiok.

Chant 195b. Kesekesengél a Ugél ‘lëgalíd.

Heroic chant of a Ugél‘lëgalíd, who came from a Ugélpelú (see story), reported by Ngiraibúog and Mulbékl.

1	e ngí e a Ugél‘legaleĩ	He is it, a Ugél‘lëgalíd!
	kid a merül ra pelú ‘l,	We made the place,
	ĕ ked lulí a Nglai lkéd	and we made Nglai lked,
	manguógo ² ra tal a gad	to keep each man,

¹ Ngarbagéd is meant and nearby Desekéł, called here Nglai lkéd.

² menguóku to carry on the arm WALL., this means each man is important.

5 mě di de pitegělá ri ě goblīl
 a de gěróid
 ě te māsemaṯ¹ re kid te māsemaī re kid
 ra pelúád arsomi kid ueī 10 arsomi kid ueī
 tě kmung bdága² toágěl
 l dikěá gongikěül³ l meṯ ě alteltél ma garagár
 a de ngára pelú ě rikl
15 ě gokér a mlě ra Guóděł ma
 Jegád⁴
 gó bo ě l meī mě dodós⁵ l mangáng
 ě l mēgirt⁶ a lengekléd⁷.
 re gērūl telιά
20 a Riag a Dukerám⁸
 a di merá geitél
 ě m dugí⁹ ra dalēm liús ak mesarǎg a goálag
 ě lusīk a didaṯ¹⁰
25 lúlěmrúges¹¹ a klepkál makngoió¹² meng tal tugákl¹³ ě ruba balāi¹⁴
 a lteltél ma garagár
 a dengěšěgeī¹⁵ a Itáp¹⁶ 30 melangára¹⁷ logólog ra gělagá lě gěós.
 l tak¹⁸ a kelél ainsá re ugák mě di l ngak mě di l ě kó ke mě lě ko

so that we are many in the houses;
when we are far,
they are superior to us,
they are superior to us,
in our land superior to us, oh superior to us, oh!
They say, the channel has now peace,
it does not come any more to the strait,
as in the entire past,
when we were on the place outside.
Questions came to Guóděł and to Jegád.
when you go, (tell) they should come,
so that we sisters eat together and make a border in front of our houses on both sides;
a Riag and Dukerám
can do, as he likes.
you carve on the young palms,
I step on Diadema-sea urchins, to look for freedom
and to snatch a privilege, and I got it, and one helps,
you rubak: truthfully!
In all the past time,
because we climbed up to a Itáp,
there was the indent to this very day;
he shipped his food, too late it came to me,
and only I, and only you, I came to you.

a Ugél‘lěgalíd to Klotráol:
 ke mě lumís a mesákt rar Meltél¹
 tor‘ribög² ra ngerél³ a pelú ar mangalāulāu⁴
35 me gělagá kisívěgá kmengiu⁵
 otak a ilúög ma ududiu⁶ ak di lisá⁷ mengúio bagagau l liús ak mesaik lagád a peluák
 a rengúk a dmeu r tir 40 a dekié ma demád
 mě tagá mě
 gosmí⁸ a gusél ra Matpáng⁹ ra l dēgaró gorěréd¹⁰.
 ma lagád mě lokokói¹¹
45 ě longedil¹² a kěléd
 ě lomngar a idengeléd¹³.

a Ugél‘lěgalíd to the rubak of Goréör:
 a Ngara meketí iá Sagalól, Ngirátpang¹⁴
 goderegālél a Ibědul
50 meng měi ra ike re Nggól
 l mendedúg ra makamád malebika¹⁵ Goréör
 mě loukér re ngi Ngarmíd ma Moságel¹⁶
 e ma kulái gotělēgělél¹⁷
55 ě ki nguNgarmíd
 ě lě goridi¹⁸ Ngarebóděł

You came to see and tied ar Meltél, for they wanted to rule over the place, the high chiefs;
and today we have destroyed your places;
I bring on board those begging for mercy and your money
I push it away like an empty coconut
I am a lazy person in my place, my heart is satisfied about her/them
in life and in death.
Who is coming,
and pushes open his lime stick in Matpáng,
since our horror arose?
If men would be here and would speak, they would just fish our food and collect firewood for us.

Ngara meketí he!
Sögölóng, master of a Tpang, was a messenger of Ibědul, came to them to Ngarenggól,
to prepare the fight,
when Goréör was still weak and it was oppressed by Ngarmíd and Moságöl;
and I took away its oppressors,
we took Ngarmíd, brought far away Ngarebóděł;

¹ mesamaṯ to be superior, somir superior to them; in Ngarenggól a Ugél was outtalked, therefore Klotráol called him to Goréör, in order to protect each other.

² from búdog peace.

³ strait, that can be crossed swimming; in former times, there was always war in Ugélpelú, now there is peace in Goréör.

⁴ see story 161; the following is addressed to the messenger.

⁵ odós sisters, dódos we sisters

⁶ actually cross wall.

⁷ from ngelóng front side.

⁸ galid spirit of Ngěráod. (see also Nggeřāngěł.) Vol. 2, pp. 180 a. 43.

⁹ from meláug to carve, to injure; dáug a nick.

¹⁰ medidai wide, free, easy; osīk to look for.

¹¹ omrúgěš, to catch.

¹² from ngu to take. Vol. 2, p. 344.

¹³ mesebagákl to help a feeble person, for instance in a fight.

¹⁴ balat = běrat, ěberat you can really; said by the rubak.

¹⁵ from ngmásag to climb up.

¹⁶ a piece of land with a cave in Nagrekobasáng on Roiskobasáng.

¹⁷ = ngarengí it is here.

¹⁸ from tmák to go on board (WALL. olták); this means Ngarevikl, that received the gokaṯ money for the food.

¹ name for the young people of Ngěrupesáng.

² orriběg when someone wants everything for himself.

³ from ngór mouth, voice, see story 148.

⁴ from mangalulaṯ to whisper, like kalulaṯ the whispering of the chiefs, the orders and agreements, then they themselves.

⁵ actually: broken open your kim-shell; smiveg to break open.

⁶ udoud money; iu “yours” here instead of ir “your”.

⁷ to shove away with the stick melúies; úio like; a Ugél provides the money from Ngarmíd and Ngarekobasáng to Goréör, where it is like an empty coconut. He wanted to have land for himself in Desekél; Klotráol gave the money to Ngarevikl, and a Ugél did not receive anything.

⁸ from mengósm to push open.

⁹ The head of the path on Ngerekobasáng towards the place Goréör.

¹⁰ oreór to fright, goreór agent of fright.

¹¹ melekoi to speak.

¹² omengéd to fish

¹³ omngar a idúngěł to collect firewood.

¹⁴ rubak of a Jebúkul V, Sogolóng from blai a Tpang; goderúgel messenger.

¹⁵ from búik boy, who is weak.

¹⁶ another name for Nagrekobasáng.

¹⁷ gotológöl from gotilěg to press, see chant 197 about Medeigeřpélau.

¹⁸ mangeróid to bring further away

	ě lě goridi ¹ Ngarebóděł	brought far away Ngarebóděł;
	ě mo sokúi ² a Itáp	we crawled to a Itáp,
	l mo ngomediá ³ ngisél	we destroyed its old men, women and children,
	ma lomáog arsagél ⁴ mo ra dáob	and their blood flowed into the sea;
60	ě kutekír ⁵ a tal ě kebil	I bring on board a girl,
	mě ngára geimák	that I have her in my hand; and I
	ma kikó sumagei ⁶ ě ra Goréör	want to imprison her in Goréör,
	mang tal tudél a Ugél‘lěgalid rě	and it is a monument of Ugél‘lěgalid
	gělagáng	of today.
	kom kol ngomediá ⁷ re Meltél	You now killed Meltél,
65	l mo re Kamáis ⁸	and brought to Nagrekamáis;
	a Ibědul klsuelém ⁹ .	a Ibědul, you have been lying.

Chant 196. The Singer Golděgól from Nggeiangěl And His Songs, With Which He Helped To Build Ngarekamáis.

log.: bai 9 VII^a illustr. d.-pl. 26^b.

The men’s clubs of Goréör wanted to build a big new stone landing bridge in Ngarekamáis, on the northern side of Goréör. Therefore, they sent a message to Nggeiangěl, to the singer Golděból, to make him come and entertain and invigorate the workers, to secure a perfect outcome with the help of the magic of his songs. He came in an old kaberúög-canoe, on board he had 8 baskets, they were filled with chants and well bound. He then sat down on the dock and sang the first chant as gokosóděł ¹⁰, as a present is called that is given to a passing canoe. Men and women surrounded him and listened to his voice. The following 7 chants have been transmitted:

	1 Gokosóděł.
1	Ngarageibárs ¹¹ a bósög a ngáre Nggeiangěl	Ngarageibárs, famine is in Nggeiangěl
	ma k di silúk ¹² a ikáng mng di ětiu	and I only filled these nine alone
	mě gokosóděł l ngěál ¹³	and a present in addition;
	ě ngak a tkí omekěoi ra blebáol	only I do not receive any presents,
	meng di mědák l mlei	only my face came.
	ki silemesemáng ¹⁴	2 We have tied them
	meng di blog ¹⁵ l ngára ngeló ra Tutekau ¹⁶	and they are lying around empty in front of Tutekau,

¹⁹ mangeróid to bring further away

¹ from mesako to crawl; ngais the baggage; a Itáp, a land on Roiskobasáng, where the cave was situated.

² melémed to destroy

³ rásäg blood, his blood, referring to ngáis.

⁴ from olták to embark; otekír refers to many, not one.

⁵ mesúmeg to set something, for instance posts.

⁶ meděi dead.

⁷ the great pier of Goréör to embark to Ngěrupesáng.

⁸ klsūł the lie; he had said he would protect them.

⁹ see story 158

¹⁰ name of a men’s club.

¹¹ siluk from smuk to put into, respectively mesúk.

¹² ngeál majority, that has not been ordered; this means I do not bring anything with me.

¹³ from melemósog to tie something up, actually the baskets.

¹⁴ ulog to duck, to press together, like an empty basket, like a bird on the nest. Old baskets are lying open wide, are lying around, because the provisions were not yet ready.

¹⁵ blai in Nggeiangěl; ngelóng the front side.

ě gokouil ¹ a mangetéket re ngí
ak mo ma luiál teltél ² ra lě blěgak ³ ě Giběngí ra keděráol ⁴
ě ki mo o kerdáng ⁵
a galodír ⁶ ar Ngarageibárs
e mě reměi mak melengés

Ngarageibárs a gadesél a Bělau a rai ⁷ ngarióu me keděuli a tőkói ě ngí a debókl ⁸ gorákl l mo uěsisi ⁹
e melíd l morbáb l di kěsí ¹⁰ a more Kobasáng
mě gomúp re Begěl ¹¹
ma tměgá ra toágěl l mo re Berúög ¹²

Ngarageibáng dimle ngeriu
ě ngak kuě meremáng ma mko kimlo dıl
ng díak ke kngá ¹³ góltak
l diak a delagělám ¹⁴
ě kidi metikák ¹⁵ ra ráel
keroi mě dólal‘l ¹⁶ ng tokói, goeá tiei ¹⁷.

Ngiraterekedó ¹⁸, momés
a bodomedıkl ¹⁹, l mo kuóp
a ngerdél ²⁰, gogíd ma geimád ng kúměr tiáng a tiá sengdél a gesél

ma te ngılu mengórakl ma dekiei ma ltú a rengúd rě geilagáng kedě ngu měngmó gelág
ě misúr ²¹ meng dékel

¹ gokaũ provisions.

² like airagár in former times.

³ obagákl (omegakl WALL.) to drift, to swim, in front of the anchor.

⁴ The translator said for this “in the channel”; kederáol is the side of the canoe, the one where the outrigger is not.

⁵ from kměrd.

⁶ galáod entertainment, from mangaláod.

⁷ low as a “flatfish”.

⁸ from melépěs to cut (WALL. melébes and debógel.)

⁹ from osisí to erect; olsirs to support

¹⁰ from omés to look.

¹¹ a single reef nearby a Imeúngs.

¹² place in a Imelik nearby Ngapedég.

¹³ from ngu to take.

¹⁴ from delágěl place, rarely for ngáões a certain place to sit, to lie, etc.

¹⁵ metik to find WALL.

¹⁶ melal‘l to sing about someone.

¹⁷ tiei = tial; goeá same as, like.

¹⁸ man from Nggeiangěl.

¹⁹ omedıkl to hoist the mast.

²⁰ phon. for ngerdéd, from ngúrd tendon.

²¹ from búık boy, who is weak.

but their provisions make them stay;

I say, I want to be swimming like in former times

the (canoe) Gibéngí on the starboard side and then we went landing, to entertain them, Ngarageibárs,

then I go home and cut palm wine.

3 Ngarageibárs, the stone path of Palau it is low at the beginning, and we walk on it, as is and it is cut the mast and hoisted, one climbs up and looks, who is going to Ngarekobasáng, or who is fishing with a basket on Ngarebegěl,

or who crosses the strait to Ngaraberúög.

4 Ngarageibárs, (you have) only your mouths

now I have come,

and if I would be a woman,

I would not take money for love,

I would not have your place,

I would lie down on the path.

This is the reason for our singing; it is nothing like this.

5 Ngira keredóng, look,

when we hoist the mast, then protrude

our tendons, legs, and arms.

This kmekúměr-(Parkia parvifoliola) tree is only a small twig of bamboo,

and they used it for a mast,

yet, we stay, and when we are inclined today,

then we use it as a yardarm or change it into a punt.

	6
a mlai ě rikebei	The canoe, you girls,
kim ngĭlu r tial mēmong	we took it from here to there,
ě ngu tial ueĩkang ¹	we take it in this direction,
ma l bo ra dáob	and when it goes into the sea,
ě ng úngĭl tatengelél ² ra geděsáóg	so is good his sailing down in front of the seas,
a mekngit l koténgel ³	yet bad, when it is lying on its nose,
a teliá re ngí a pedĭkl	on one side it is top-heavy
ma klsau a kauemáil	and when the sweetheart has crooked legs,
meng dio osíu a pkúl	when her knees are knocking together
a mangoróid a bereberél	and wide apart are her feet.
	7
Ngarageibárs a geisíu	Ngarageibárs, your news
mangkekelékl ⁴	run eagerly,
ma Udid ⁵ ngmai	and Udid took them
meng mo dmú ra Voleāi	and report them to Voleāi,
ma geisíu a togetegál ⁶	and your news run around,
l melegětĕg e loiák ⁷ ióu	disperse, and march below.

Story 197. The Galid Spirit Medegeĩpelau⁸

Ngiragologotiáng was the son ⁹ of the old widow Duói in Ngát pang, who was mortal herself, while her son had godlike characteristics. When he had grown up, he walked across the land to a Iraĩ to see if he liked this place. Since the sight satisfied him, he dropped in on blai Ngaregemŭl, where galid spirit Uáu ¹⁰ ra gemŭl lived. They soon became friends and together had a look at the village. Ngiragologotiáng had the secret desire to find a place where he could settle down. When they came to Bitalpelú, the visitor’s desire was so intense, that he asked his friend Uáu, if he was willing to give him this land, which was soon granted.

Hereupon, Ngiragologotiáng came to blai a Idegädĕgĭl, where he met an old woman, who had no children. She was glad to take him in as her help assistance and support. In those days, the village a Iraĩ was a common and weak settlement, with a population that had to suffer a lot. Thus, the ugly looking young man, who was to become a great galid spirit under the name Medegeĩ pélau, decided to make this place powerful and important. According to another informant the beginning of the story goes like this: Once upon a time, Medegeĩ pélau lived under another name in Ngimis, the main settlement of Ngát pang. In those days the village Ngaramedángep heavily domineered over Ngimis. Therefore, the young man was looking for some means to destroy the place. One day, the people of this place sailed to the entrance of Ngaramlungúi to bring food to the local galid. The boy went with them. After the canoes had arrived at Cape a Usás, the boy secretly took some red earth, chewed it, and then spit it out, so that his companions believed he was hemorrhaging.

¹ This means towards Babldáob, vaseĩ towards Gorěör.

² from meténgĕl to go down, the canoe is pushed by the seas, sailing downhill on the front weave crest.

³ when the bow of the canoe lies too deep in the water; pedĭkl is more common for this.

⁴ from mangelékl to run quickly, mangkekelékl a little bit slower.

⁵ probably Mógemog, on Palau otherwise called Uekeuid, loco Ulúlidi

⁶ togetegáng now running

⁷ oiak to march, below like the fish.

⁸ from omadáoog to punish a place, thus the “castigator of Palau”..

⁹ as a human being he supposedly also had the name Golsudóud. Regarding his lineage, respectively his immigration from the west, see what has been said about the god a Itúngĕlbai of a Imelĭk and one more depiction in story 170 about Golungĭs.

¹⁰ uaĩ stupid, crazy.

They quickly put him on shore. He speedily ran across the country, swam across rivers until he reached Ngaramedángep, where he quickly set the houses on fire. When the inhabitants saw from the entrance their village in flames, sheer terror grabbed them and they sailed across the ocean with their canoes. On Palau people believe that they came to Asia and became the ancestors of the Japanese. The young man took the wooden idol Maráelkéd with him as his booty.

Walking (maráel) across the grassland (ked), the galid spirit with his wooden idol turned from Ngatpang to a Iraĩ ¹, where he lived in blai a Idegädĕgĭl. Yet, he cut palm wine in Ngát pang, always wandering there over land. One morning, while he was hiking, he came to the place a Ngdingdgaritĕm on the savannah, where he encountered a woman who was just giving birth to a child. She had medicine in a coconut shell. He told her she should wait until he was coming back from Ngát pang, so they could walk together to a Iraĩ. She did this and after his return they went together home. On the way they took a break at a place, named by Medegei Omāsagāl lĕ galĕ`gĕd ², because there they broke a dead and stinking galegĕd-crab into pieces and ate it. Then, they came to the river Ngabúdĕl ³. The woman poured the medicine out and filled her coconut flask with water. Then she took some hibiscus leaves and squeezed them into the water, so that it became slimy; this gave the river its name ngabúdĕl “slimy”.

Then they continued walking. The woman broke off a melastoma ⁴ twig to protect herself from the sun; in this fashion they reached the place Gomerŭl, where today Bai a Desíu is standing. When they reached Medŭlbai, she said: Everything down from Bai Diberdí belongs to me! and Medegeĩ pélau added, “very well, everything south from there belongs to me”⁵! And he continued, “we will separate. You will be a Ubád ⁶ and the male title shall be Ngirakéd, because I found you on the ked, the “grassland” In this manner they divided their power. One day, he went to Ngát pang to see his old mother. She was sick and since he did not want to leave her alone, he took her along. She, however, died on the way in Kúmĕr, a place on the grassland, where he also buried her. When he noticed, that the grave was located close to the path and everyone passed it, he took the bones out and brought them to the gogeál Ngarakedlúkl, where he buried her on top at the place Gomakatl.

From here, both our informants continued in the same manner:

The woman Magád raidegädĕgĭl lived in his house in aIraĩ, and she was like a mother to him. One day, Medegeĩ pélau thought how he, could become the citizen of the village and the real son of the woman. He went fishing on a raft and found a black garamrúm sea cucumber, which he placed on the raft and when he landed, he left it there, while bringing the fish he had caught to the house, so that the old woman could cook them. She now went down to get some salt water and when she saw the sea cucumber on the raft, she developed an appetite and ate it. Medegeĩ pélau, however, had circuitously run ahead of her and slid into the water bladder of the Holothurie, so that he safely reached the old woman’s womb. She got pregnant, and after five months she gave birth to a boy, who grew so fast, that after three days he could already walk and soon he had grown into a young man. He tried to please his mother to win her love. She had a taro patch in Ngarduāis, where she had to go by canoe on a daily basis, which was rather bothersome with the tides.

¹ According to another information, he first came to Madál in Goikúl, where the stone Tkakl is still standing at his residence, the former blai Ngarteluáng. It is the “support of the outrigger” because here he painted and rigged his canoe. At first, he wanted to establish a Iraĩ here, and therefore, the northern head of the trail (see map 23.) is still called a Iraĩ. Yet, when he came to know the area of today’s village, he pushed his canoe into the water and sailed there. From today’s a Iraĩ he then sent his spirits, the arigel, to the competition for the ngas-twig. However, in this account Medegeĩpélau is confused with Ugelsŭng (see story 16).

² omósóg to break in pieces. The woman had brought the crab along. He is considered to be the residence of the galid spirit of a Imelĭk called a Itúngĕlbai..

³ also called Ngarabogúi.

⁴ = kui.

⁵ The northern side of the path, the area of rubak III Ngirakéd; in the south rules rubak II a Rdiálul.

⁶ Even today this is still the male and female title of house III that has the governing power.

After some time, the son said to her, “why do you always leave so early and return so late?” “Because I always have to go against the flow!” she replied. “I will help you,” said the boy, went to Megórei, the long dam made of stones, and turned high tide to low tide and the other way around, just as it was convenient for his mother. Therefore it was easy play for the old woman to be on time for cooking. She was very happy about this and started to love him. Since she now always arrived so early the boy was afraid she would interrupt his demonic games, therefore the boy asked his mother to warn him with some noise before entering the house. This request made the old woman curious and next time she approached very carefully. Then she saw, that the boy had turned a part of the house into a pond, in which he played with his favorite fish, the blacktip shark matukěól. She left again and, as requested by the boy, made some noise and when she reached the door, the boy sat quietly in the house. Medegeĭ pélau had received his fish in the following way:

One day, he and the demon a Nggeĭ from Nggasagáng were cutting wood in the bush, actually a plagéos-(Verbana family) tree. Then this one carved a shark called matukěól, while Medegeĭpélau created a human figure. In the evening they left their work in the bush and went home. Before falling asleep Medegeĭpélau said to a Nggeĭ, “tomorrow morning we will get our work. You can sleep at the door, I will remain in the middle of the house”. Nggeĭ agreed. At night, however, Medegeĭ pélau stepped over him, went to their working spot and exchanged the effigies. The following morning a Nggeĭ noticed at once the mix-up, but he did not say anything. Then both of them went home with their work. When they came to the river Gadéng, Medegeĭ pélau said to his friend, “put your fish into the water and bark, then you will see, what a good thing this work is.” a Nggeĭ did this and at once the figure swam around in the water. Medegeĭ pélau grabbed the fish and took it home, where he played with it. Only from here he reached the ocean. The devious demon also took the figure in form of a human being and called it Goltegeĭ, because due to the mix-up omtěgeĭ it changed hands. Medegeĭ pélau built an ulangáng-shrine for the new galid ¹ spirit. When this one fell into ruin, the wooden figure and the tangadik-kingfisher birds, which had been carved by both of them just for fun, were brought to the cave a Klim on the lime island Ngara kedlúkl. Even after 1900 everything was still fetched from there for the big ruk-dances and was assembled on the stone platform in front of the houses of the chiefs of a Iraĭ ².

When Medegeĭ pélau was surprised by his mother, he was covered by scales, in short he looked ugly. He was still very young. Yet, soon he was able to go fishing on his own. When he came back home with his fishing spear, at a certain distance of the house he stood still and threw the spear so expertly towards his residence that it fell by itself into its golongól-suspension on the roof. Medegeĭpélau and a Nggeĭ always went fishing together. Afterwards they brought their catch home to the sandy beach Górák ³ on the island Ngarakedlúkl, where they were thrown together on one heap. Whereupon they started the distribution. Since Medegeĭpélau did not receive a juvenile needlefish⁴, the boy blocked the division so long until he had one in his lot. He finally enforced that blai Idégädégĭl was always assigned the needlefish, and this is still practiced today. After the house has collapsed, people now throw the fish onto the place of the house, because nobody in a Iraĭ dares to eat them. Every day, in the morning, at lunchtime, and in the evening, Medegeĭ pélau heard the sound of a conch shell on the opposite rock island of Ngarduáis. He asked his mother about it.

¹ see map of a Iraĭblai 16 b.

² In spring 1910, when a Rungúl, the last high priest of Medegeĭpélau, had died, I emptied the cave, which was situated on the eastern side of the island above the surf. I did this despite the difficulties of the location. The wooden idols of the great Pelauan god were already badly weathered, today they are in Hamburg. If an unauthorized person fetches the idols, only Rungúl can return them.

³ according to him, the white people had given the island its name by mistake. Since the word became naturalized and as it is practical, I suggested to leave it on the charts of the Reichsmarineamt. But it should have been written Gor´rak, because Gorak is one of the islands of Nggeĭāngel.

⁴ young called mordúbög, old gai.

She said: It is Semdiu ¹, rubak I of Ngarduáis. — The young man continued his questions, what for was it like this and the mother replied: This is a signal to get the food ready, because he is rich and has many servants. — Medegeĭpélau decided to have a look at all this himself. He went to a Nglong, a plot of land nearby a Iraĭ. There he met a man at work. He asked him, if he wanted to accompany him. The worker said: How could I do this, here is my adze and my standard gauge. Medegeĭpélau told him: I carry these two items home for you. — Very well, replied the other one, then hang my adze on the gorongóděł beam and place my standard gauge in the golongól pendant. Medegeĭpélau took both items, threw them into the air, and they flew to blai Bars to their correct place.⁴

When Medegeĭ pélau wanted to get going, the other one said: We don´t have a canoe! — Then the galid spirit said: Just step into my footsteps! — In this manner they walked over the water to the mountain Suskamedúkl ². There, Medegeĭ pélau kept his companion waiting at the Kămedúkl stone and went himself to Ngarduáis. There, he saw two swordfish in the water, he broke their swords off³, and took them with him. On the way he found the sheath of an areca palm leaf, in which he placed both swords. In this fashion he transported them secretly into Semdiu´s cooking house, where he helped with the preparation of the food. When the food was ready, he convinced the servants to leave and let him serve the food. Thus, he remained alone in the cooking house and waited until he heard the conch shell. When, after some time, he had heard it, he took the dishes and took both swords with him as well. He found the door of the residential house locked and he called: Open the door a bit and let the food in! — At once the doormat was pulled back a bit and quickly he stuck the swords into the house, hit the chief, killed him, and threw him into the ocean. He took his dugong-bracelet, his trumpet shell, and all his privileges, the klepkal´l, woven mats, of the aining-stage with him to his house a Idegädégĭl in a Iraĭ, where he returned at once with his companion. This one was still waiting at mountain Suskamedúkl and had sat down on a guld, as these rolling stones are called, that break off the lime rocks. In the meantime high tide had started, and the man had taken refuge on this guld-stone. For his loyal behavior Medegeĭ pélau gave him the title a Rguld accompanied by privileges, and made him rubak IV of a Iraĭ.

Now Medegeĭ pélau tried to teach his village companions sailing. First he prepared a sail and the necessary ropes and poles. Since he did not have a canoe, he first went with all his sailing gear to the landing place. There, he waited for the fishermen to leave. He offered to accompany them, but they refused because of the load he wanted to take with him. The first canoes passing him were all filled with people and refused because of his cargo, yet they always pointed to the following canoe. In the last canoe were only two men, they condescended when he was begging to be taken along. As soon as he was on board, he organized his gear and this frightened the fishermen very much, they thought the wind was hindering them. The galid spirit laughed about them and made them understand that a sail would make him move faster than any of their punting or paddling could. When the sail was hoisted and one of the two fishermen held the rudder, thus steering the canoe, as he had been taught, the canoe started dancing and then flew forward as swift as an arrow, leaving all other canoes behind. For the next fishing trip, they all wanted to have him on board, but Medegeĭ pélau remained faithful to the two fishermen, who had first taken him along. The others learned by and by how to use the sails. After some time Medegeĭpélau wandered up the east coast. In Ngarsúl he put his hand into the galid spirit-house to feel who was inside. The priest grabbed him and asked: Who is this?

¹ KUB. V, p. 23: In former times and even before today´s circumstances were established Ngarduáis was the mainland and its god Semdiu the main god of Eyrray. Madahéy pélau came and stepped into a sea cucumber called Karamrum, people dismantled it and brought it on shore, where it gave birth to him. From now on he lived like a human being under the name Abóy (see story 11), however he had a very despotic disposition and demanded to rule the country. This made people, with whom he lived laugh aloud. Enraged, he left and with the help of the neighbors he covered Eyrray with war. In due course he got the power and created today´s conditions.

² name obviously from the fish kěmědukl.

³ ngarél a melúičs.

Medegeĩpélau answered: It is I.— When he felt dizzy, he continued: Give me your ransom ¹.— The man from Ngarsúl replied completely surprised: Very well, when you come at the right time, then I will give you a *riámě*l-fruit. — He declared to be satisfied and moved on. In Ngarengasáng he did the same. The local priest there gave him shiny young coconuts ² and Medegeĩpélau said: You shall be my father and when I am building a stage for the spectators in a Iraĩ, you shall climb up and get it ready, so that I can sit there on top. — From here he went to Ngarevíkl, where he put his hand into the house of Mangerengár lě goálăg ³, but it was stuck by the spines of its inhabitant.

The galid spirit shouted: Ke, ke, kėi! and asked: Who is inside —? Whereupon the one inside said his name. So he said: Lift your belly a bit higher, so that I can place my hand underneath. — When this had happened, he lifted the spirit outside and took him to Galáp and declared it to be his place ⁴. The same he did in *a*Gól, therefore, both these places belong to Medegeĩpélau and to a Iraĩ. Medegeĩpélau went from a Gól to Ngaregolóng, an area he combed through thoroughly, in order to come to know it. He liked it so much, that he decided to bring it under his power.

When he came to Gólei, people there were just building a canoehouse in Metěulogól. Since he looked so ugly, completely covered with scales, and because he was dirty, they sent him down into the big hole in which one of the pillars was going to be inserted. Medegeĩpélau was told to dig out the earth and clean the hole. While he was working down there, they decided to push the pillar on top of him, to kill him, because they had no idea who he was, and where he came from. Yet, as soon as the pillar arrived at the bottom of the hole, Medegeĩpélau caused its inside to become hollow⁵, climbed through this space atop the pillar, and sat down on top of it. To everyone’s surprise he spoke in a friendly manner: Look if the pillar is well positioned. — Then they sensed, that they were dealing with a really strong galid spirit. He forced them to give him the title Tegógo of rubak 1 and a bai. First it was a simple one, then a góutang with two floors, just like the one he had in a Iraĩ⁶.

(see a similar ending in story 14.)

Medegeĩpélau turned from Gólei to Ngabiúl, for he heard that a big house would be newly thatched. He stopped at the house of rubak 1 Ngiraurėkěd, who lived there with an old woman. She was just gathering leaves for the roof and said she wanted to have some fresh water ready upon her return. The galid spirit filled her coconut flask and emptied it into the kim-shell lying in front of the house on the stone pavement. Then, he immersed in form of a mosquito larva into the water, as soon as the old woman came home. She went straight to the coconut flask and when she found it empty, she went to the shell emptying it with a few gulps and swallowing the mosquito larva. Already a few days later she felt pregnant and some months later she gave birth to a boy who grew quickly ⁷. Thus, Medegeĩpélau became the son of the village Ngabiúl and the heir of the house a Urėkěd, besides which he built the Bai a Idemāi for himself. Therefore, the house a Urėkěd has two titles, Regeireĩ lě gad and Regeireĩ lěgalid ⁸ spirit, the last one is also called Ngiraidemāi.

When the galid spirit assumed power in Ngaregolóng, people remained quiet. No sickness and no war existed any more. In Gólei he was called Ngirailuóng, in Ngabiúl Ngiraidemāi, and in a Gol Ngiragomėkūl. In Galap he had not only the house a Ibedagál, because all of Galáp is his house. (see story 14 a. 15.)

¹ nglat, when a weaker person redeems himself from a more powerful one.

² mălang ra mungúr.

³ “delicate sea urchin”, actually eat young coconuts múngur; goálăg the sea urchin diadema; see story 97 about Tagetbós.

⁴ tarting from here see story 14, at a Tmėlógód.

⁵ It supposedly was a plagéos-tree, already mentioned above. Therefore, in old age it always gets hollow.

⁶ see KUB. VIII, p. 248.

⁷ Another informant said: after 10 days was the birth and after 10 days he had grown into a man.

⁸ Regereĩ is the title of blai III and IV in Ngabiúl. In the villages he occupied, Medegeĩpélau always took the name of the master of blai I.

When he went to the south, he took the goálăg-sea urchin from Nagrevíkl to a Iraĩ, where he threw it away at the klim-place in Malspásp. A big hole indicates the spot, where it is lying. When something important is going to happen, the goálăg comes out of the hole. In addition, people reported about Medegeĩpélau that he had a relationship in a Iraĩ with a móngol from Ngasiás on Pelíliou, with whom he visited her blai IV Ngamagád. When a feast was held in a Iraĩ, the part of the gaild’s share of food was always given to her. She saved everything and when the Ngarairāi, the community of the village-rubak, had assembled she always had something to offer. Therefore, he loved her more and more and followed her. Her name was a Iluāi ra ngamagád ¹.

Chant 197. Medegeĩpelau

	Gėkil agāu a bólang kedí ² lūkėd ng surėl ³ a melóp l uél l ngikel ngára gėd ⁴ ng mě súdek? ngak lagád?	We want to braid it with coconut fibers, the net, as binding for the green turtle, a fish in shallow water. Is this my rope? I man?
5	armilid gėkil a direkák lúngúpet ⁵ e ngi arė Ngasekėbúi ⁶ ra Iraĩ. a dí bomspėsúbėd ⁷ a rengmeú ė ngará l udóud akulái re ngi? ng tagá dilú mal ’ló kilėd ⁸	they twined the rope, but it was not yet ready for ar Ngasekėbúi in Iraĩ Pay good attention in your hearts. What kind of money will I take? Who said that daybreak was near?
10	ė goeú ra garagár Ngardúbög ⁹ mě melengóiės re ngi ra tal moáis e ngi a dė geitá ¹⁰ blid ė rubál, di galdóiög ¹¹ e ngák ěuė tengelėk ¹² ra galdėng	A storm will come; Ngardóbög will boil it out in one night. When we lost our houses, you rubak, (we have) only small change,
15	m Bai mekngít ak mangélulau garároũ	bad is the house, I whisper enemy,
17	ė ngi aikél metelil ¹³ a gad ma iús lě galidėgád lólang ¹⁴ r tirikél lureúl rúbak	(? he that go down of human being and crocodile?), the god-man has devoured those secondary chiefs,
20	lobá ¹⁵ galebúgėp ěu l ě pngėk ¹⁶ l metėt e kidi galidėgád ěrăbóng ¹⁷ ma tekingėd ¹⁸ a di úngil	who took the galebúgėp in my cupboard; he is wealthy, and we are just demigods, children; our behavior is only good;

¹ see also KUB. V, p. 55

² from melikėd to braid a net.

³ from mesaũr to bind, (saur bandage, WALL.)

⁴ gėd more forceful for gei the reef area, shallow water around the islands.

⁵ ng lúpet it is clear.

⁶ this is the name of the council of the chief’s women of a Iraĩ.

⁷ from mesúbėd to send a message, mesepesúbėd a rengúl, he is handy, competent.

⁸ l’lomes light, kmėd close, kilėd just before, was close.

⁹ in Ngátpang

¹⁰ see chant 194

¹¹ piece of money made of glass, of minor value.

¹² from metėngėl to step down; metelil obviously from melil to go; the meaning is not clear.

¹³ metėngėl to step down; metelil obviously from melil to go; the meaning is not clear.

¹⁴ om măngang to eat; therefore a Iraĩ and Ngabiúl in Ngaregolóng have no uriúl rúbak.

¹⁵ from obang to take.

¹⁶ pup cupboard.

¹⁷ = arbúik the boys; with “he” Medegeĩpélau is meant, who considers the people from a Imelík to be mere boys.

¹⁸ from tókói the speech, the behavior.

	ě sel ūked galid a kesókēs a ilteĩ	that devil’s net catches wealth,
	ě ngi a dekíe	when we stay,
25	ma dūlemagém ¹ ra tēgēbēl	and we took together the spikes of
	gosés lóug	the Synaueia (Stone) fish
	a bikēl rikl kēdám	the boys outside of Ngarekēdám,
	lmo raikē ra Ngatkip,	go up to Ngatkip,
	l mo raikē Ruluóbēl	go to that Ngēruluobēl,
	l mo raikē Rusár	go to that Ngurusár,
30	mang mo raikē ra Ngarsúng	and to that Ngarsúng,
	l mo raikē r Diúl	they go to Ngadiúl,
	ě mo raikē ra Garau ²	go to Nggarau,
	mang mo raikē r Desúm	and go to that Ngaradesúm,
	mang mogú imūl ra luáng ra	and they want to cross over to a
	despadá	Iuáng on the eastern side,
35	ma dekiei mē domúgol tekaingéd ³	and we stay and begin our behavior,
	me dolá ⁴ gotēlēgēlēd ⁵ ra blid	we take the oppressors of our houses
	rē Kikláng ⁶ ma Iraĩ	in Ngarekikláng and a Iraĩ ,
	meng kuk mogaimong ⁷ l melekói.	and then he can talk higher (than anyone else);
	eá logúp a mūr, nguliér ⁸?	instead a feast, for what reason?
40	ma rubūkūl a iánged a melténgel	and the chiefs of heaven come down
	ma Medegeĩ pélau	and Medegeĩpélau
	a mekngit a rengūl	sad at heart;
	a meng mo meténgel ra Meribáng	he wants to go down to Meribáng
	e ng másag ra Megórei ⁹	and to ascend to Megórei
45	é uēkel ‘lí gogíl	it surrenders his foot
	mokómo kel ‘lú, komó kel ‘láng	surrender (a plot of land); you have dismissed,
	komóterebē ¹⁰ ra úngil pélu ra Iraĩ	pushed away a good piece of land of a Iraĩ ;
	ma mēsengél a géd	and its mēas-fish in the shallow water
	ma gaiép ma sim l kal ‘l	and pigeons and the season for food;
50	makmangēó ¹¹ mak mló mesúrōg	I am taken and went to clean my
	ra meklegék	taro patch,
	lúgul a delék ¹² re Ngēráod	my very own one, in Ngēráod
	a Mlagél ‘la tobedál	Mlagél ‘l steppes outside,
	mēlugēl ¹³ a geimál lmángēl	she puts her hands on the head and cries

¹ from omagém to pull oneself together, for instance spread fingers.

² The western part of a Iraĩ.

³ = tekingéd from tókói.

⁴ from melaĩ to bring.

⁵ gotológol oppressor, from gotilēg to press.

⁶ meténgēl to step down; metelil obviously from melil to go; the meaning is not clear.

⁷ = mogang i mong.

⁸ nguliér, ngara meté meláng for what reason?

⁹ The long and high stone bridge between a Iraĩ and the gogeál Ngarakédlukl; Meribáng the bridge at Bai Meléngel.

¹⁰ from ulterib to push one piece away from the other.

¹¹ from ngu to take.

¹² In fact “clan of my belly”, my very own; Ngeráod the galid spirit-mountain.

¹³ melúgēl to carry on the head WALL.

	gēdép ¹ l uák ra Iraĩ.	about the food, the anchor of a Iraĩ .
55	a mekisá ² ma bó kngoriákl ra rois	Get up and go to the other side of
	ě Ráod	the mountain Ngēráod
	makisá ³ pelú lagád	and I see the world,
	ngo bertáng ⁴ ra gotúl	hidden in smoke
	a súmog ⁵ ma Bairairai	the shrine of Bairairai;
	ma galtagát a loréngēd ⁶	and injured they tie (him) fast,
60	a temengúrs, a temongól	they pull, they carry
	ra kekēmángēl ked	across the long grassland,
	ma kuk degāról l mēsősáōed ⁷	and then I stand now fragmented in pieces
	a kngtíl ma ungiál	his badness, his goodness.
	makdiolsesárag ⁸ ar Imūl	I just extend my begging hands for a Imūl ,
65	ma Rekeāi ma Imelīk	and Ngarekeāi and a Imelīk ;
	l ngosagá ⁹ lumēu ¹⁰ ra ngisék	climb up and break my egg,
	l ngáis galid	the egg of the galid spirit;
	l mekúl ‘l ě gēdáol ě gup ko	it is outrageous, forbidden, I have pity on you,
	makngmásag	and I walk up
70	l móukiú será Matagērakl ¹¹	striding passed that Matagērakl,
	ě tugerekli á Imelīk	hooking on to Imelīk,
	mē koiir ¹² akulekel ‘lákr ¹³ rengí	so that they float in the air; I hold it lopsided,
	akulegēderói ¹⁴ akumtáp ¹⁵ a pelú rióu	I bring disorder to it, I protect the land down there,
	a meklengē Gomakatl ¹⁶	suddenly I see Gomakátl;
75	ngarengi a dalál a Medegípélau	there is the mother of
	ra Iraĩ	Medegeĩpélau of Iraĩ;
	ě lagád l ngilu	the man took
	a meklengē ě Klim	and I saw Ngareklím;
	l di l bád re ngí a Rangarisóis	there lies in front of him Rangarisóis
	ma Maráelkéd	und Maráelkéd
80	ma iús mē tia pek l gadéng	and the crocodile and all the sharks.
	lo gup kok lokoád re ngak a Regelsulog	pity me, attack me Regelsúlog
	ěra bíta ra Rísóng	on the side Rísóng ¹⁷ .

¹ was not interpreted; I thought dep could mean the presented food in the dep-house; see melángēs a dep (KUB. V, p. 44), food for the friend of a sick person.

² mekis to get up.

³ from omés to see.

⁴ from omart to hide.

⁵ usually called tet, where sacrifices are set down

⁶ from meréngēd to tie fast.

⁷ from mesaud to fragment

⁸ olsárag to press WALL.; obersárag to softly press a sick person, also to extend your hands as a plea for something.

⁹ ng másag to climb up.

¹⁰ omēu to break.

¹¹ tagērakl the hook, also for catching sharks, can also mean the “tip of the hook”.

¹² i kliai floating.

¹³ olekel ‘lákł to hold something slant.

¹⁴ olegederói to bring into disorder.

¹⁵ omtáp estimate with the eyes

¹⁶ the top of the mountain on Ngrakédlukl, where his mother is buried, to the south is Cape Ngareklím.

¹⁷ The bush next to the galid spirit-house Ngarakikláng (see bl. 16 a Iraĩ)

	gadë, mel 'lí a medám	Mother, make your face
	a gadë, mel 'lí a ngarém	mother, make your mouth,
85	ë a Malegoltegeî ë gëbûla	yet, Malëgoltegeî is now poor,
	ma le më te mesengë der 'rómel	and they come, they see bravery,
	a rikó o Diratetakákl	they come, Diratetakál
	ma Dirakmogoróā!	and Dirakmogoró, ah!
	ma a ungiá tagalél a sils!	and at the good lunchtime!

Story 198. Chant About Ngiragókëbai From A Iraî

log.: bai 36 IX^b illustr. d.-pl. 26^b.

Sung by his wife; she said that after his death, she only wanted to have a man who resembled him in beauty and bravery.

	go medeî ë Gokëbá	When you are dead, Gókëbai,
	ë a kulsîk ra mlo oltegîm ¹ re Belau	then I look for a replacement for you in Palau,
	mak mlo midî ² ia Iragël ³ mor	and I go around to Irágël,
	Túblai ⁴	to Túblai,
	ma kukiú a ked l mo re Ngarsúl	and I walk across the grassland to Ngarsúl
5	ë mak mlo re Ngiramoāî ⁵	and came to Ngiramoāî,
	ng di marāu	who is only rich in small change,
	ë diak ë tukémet ⁶ re kid ardil	and does not care for us women.
	mo gómkong makamád,	If it would be a fight,
10	lorûl a bikel Ngarsúl	this one make the boys of Ngarsúl,
	ë te kmú bo ra Ngiramoāî	they said: go to Ngiramoāî!
	më logólt a merengelél'	and he showed his art.

Story 199. Chant About Ngiragókëbai,

The Gobak ratkár From a Iraî, also called Gabás.

log.: bai 9 IV^b illustr., bai 15 III^b, bai 76 IV^a, bai 79 III^b bai 81 III^a chanted by his pregnant daughter in Ngarbagéd; her husband lived in Ngarsúng and belongs to blai II Gësuróî in a Iraî. When a Iraî was destroyed by the people of Goréör and the inhabitants stayed in Ngátpang, Ngirakéd, the high chief of a Iraî was mad at Ngiragókëbai and sent a message to Ngiramoāî in Ngarsúl, to kill him. People brought a shark they had caught to the rubak-bai in a Iraî and called for its distribution. When Gabás appeared, he was attacked and speared.

	dalám, l búik l mēra delék ⁸	Oh your mother! Boy, who you came into my belly,
	lë gilsengkók ⁹	I have been busy (because of you),
	a lak a ke giludúr ¹⁰ a Gabás ¹¹	when I did not want to get rid of Gabás;

¹ goltegeî replacement.

² omóieđ to go from one place to another.

³ blai IV Turágël Keklaū.

⁴ blai IV in Ngabúkëd.

⁵ the hero of Dmágël (Ngarsúl), who was brave and wealthy, but ugly

⁶ okémet not to look after.

⁷ this means, how you have to fight, the kind of fight, the magic, etc.; poss. meríngël pain, difficulty.

⁸ il belly; the mother curses her child.

⁹ magasáng industrious, busy. She also could go to her husband.

¹⁰ from menguid; goudúr to want to get rid of someone.

¹¹ also the title of rubak III of Ngarmid.

	ë mobád re ngí ra dep ¹ ra Meriáng
	l mo gorúl l mo tëlál ² klebedei
	a le më ë dil dilóp
	ar di tërúl bikél a Dmágël e ma Meról ³
	lë gëlíd ra lápek ⁴
	gomngar a Tkar melomai likó go
	ngasengasém
10	melekó Bedelóng
	ë a klobak a ngára sop re Ngira
	deldëlágel
	ë káu a Gabásl klóu l dúi ra Iraî
	a gadáng meng diak o mád
	a logúp ë ko melóbog ra gadéng
15	ë dobegí ë Gabás mengërúl delebegel

Story 200. Kesëkesengél Ngiragumeráng,

Heroic chant of Ngiragumeráng, rubak II of Melekéiok, also called Rëgëbóng, who had fled to a Iraî because of malicious gossip, and on to Goréör whereto his bad reputation followed.

	góbak ë Ngiragumeráng	Chief Ngiragumeráng,
	më ke di ulebés ⁵ aikë lërúl kngtim ⁶	only you forget these you two kinds of wickedness,
	ma lótăgăbău ⁷ ra Iraî	and people push you out of a Iraî,
	ma tá pelú re rë Goréör	and in another time of Goréör,
5	ë kingói ⁸ kau me ke mo Rogobóng	and we took you, so that you are Rëgëbóng;
	Mësëlēgadîl ⁹ mo ra Járs	Mesë lë gadîl goes to Jars,
	a di búiel a mo sikësí ¹⁰	it is only about going to look at the moon
	me tia le gëós, ër 'ráng	and this sun, my friend.
	tengëtengém ¹¹ ma kmeskâu	Your tribute and I give you
10	me së Gomekûlpelát ¹²	and that Gomekûlpelát.
	ë Rogoból kúk lengelék rekâu.	Regebóng, it is my shout to you!
	a lgúp a ke di robâî.	In return you only had ingratitude!
	aikë dmú ra Deliól	You said this to Deliól,
	telebúi a ngerél	a liar should be his mouth;
15	meng oldúrog ra ragád l kmu	therefore, he sent people to say,
	gëbákl a bibák ma telebër a metók ¹³	(he has) adzed numerous and hatchets many,
	me tië Bilung ma bosél ma bagelél	and here is Bilung and her box and her money

¹ a small ulangáng small shrine.

² tëláng actually: how much? — here “several”.

³ The bigger Ngarsúl consists of Dmagël and Meróng; a boy is Ngiramoāî.

⁴ luápek clever, brave man; galíd to bear, see also the story of Ngirangeáng.

⁵ obés to forget, pronounced like bess.

⁶ from mekngít bad.

⁷ from melégëb to push.

⁸ from ngu to take, which is to say they chased him back to Melekéiok, so that he would be again Rëgëbóng nr. 2.

⁹ women’s taro patch” a field in Melekéiok, Jars one in a Iraî.

¹⁰ from omés to see.

¹¹ from tengét toll, sacrifice.

¹² a piece of money.

¹³ petók much.

l ngára Itáog ẽ Tkip
a bomliēt ¹ a deluĩl Telngál l mo ra daob 20 l te kngě Gádlbai ma bosél ma
bagelél
e lě kol del‘ líu ² ra Ulabágad ³
ẽ Ngarabungs ⁴ a ngareá rsaol ma ikě deluĩl ngós l ngara Pipiroi ⁵ ma deluĩl a Moságel a ngara Toitmědúg ⁶ 25 lě korá Ikodelí ra klpedíu ⁷ a Regamāĩ
ẽ á Derabāĩ gobengtír
ěu delūs ouróiog
l di ngará tepatáp
a meús l kúlulau ⁸
30 ẽ galíd me ko milěgerei ⁹ mongulsĩk ra Idíd blai
l mo melím a kár
ng masáoog a búög
ng medórt a gamalém ¹⁰ l kěbúi, 35 ng dekedókel ¹¹ ra tal a geimolím ¹² ng měáng a Gádlbai
ma lomóies ẽ lomeurög
e ngi mĩt ¹³ ẽ ra gútum kom di bekĩt arubukúl a bitaliángěd ¹⁴
40 ẽ mangá dúdul mě móu ¹⁵ dúdul
ẽ bsa kelkelĩl
a Rangém ¹⁶ ma meregórog l Ngirakesúk
mě sel tal keró re Ngermíd ẽ liu l mo re Goeáol ¹⁷

in a Itáog in Ngatkip;
push the fleet from Ngatelngál into the sea, and they take away Gadlbai and his box and his money,
and tighten the mooring poles in Ulabágad
but Ngarabungs was situated at deep water and there was the fleet in Pipirói and the fleet of Moságel at Toitmědúg so that you go to Kodelí your channel of Ngaregmaĩ, but Derabei (goes) with them with an umbrella and leaves in the ears and only on the coast;
he paddled with the message.
Spirit, do not disturb him,
when he is looking for the a Idid-house,
in order to drink syrup water,
then to pick some betel nuts,
to cut your betel nut chew, then he should be covered for a Geimolīm and sacred is Gádlbai,
when the shoot and throw spears,
they pass by into the ground.
You are only bad shots, you chiefs of the side of heaven take work aprons and wear work aprons and give him his apron, Rangém and the thief Ngirakesuk;

and that one, a priest from Ngarmid wants to pass by, to Goeáol,

¹ oíet to push into the water.

² from mel'liu to drive the anchoring poles into something.

³ a branch in the channel to Ngurusár.

⁴ name for the men of a Imelĩk

⁵ east means the eastern part of the area Ngarekldéu, Moságěl is the west = Ngarekobasang.

⁶ at the northern tip of Goréör, see map 2 secondary map.

⁷ poss. of táog channel.

⁸ see story 195 Ugěllěgalíd

⁹ bagěrei it does not matter; from megerei to let go.

¹⁰ from gamúgěl small betel nut chew.

¹¹ from melekéděk to cover.

¹² “5 cups syrup”, the smallest amount of money in Ngaregolóng, paid for his covering in the sun, during the journey.

¹³ from imĩt or imiú to pass by.

¹⁴ the two sides Goréör and Melekéiok.

¹⁵ aku I, mou you (sing. and plur.) dúdul = kelkál the women’s work aprons used in the taro patch.

¹⁶ rub. II from Iebúkul.

¹⁷ probably a blai.

45 ẽ kisó ¹ ra měrál l blim rě Kiklá ² ra lolāngét rekāu ra klsáděl ³ ẽ ma ielél tágāl l pelú ẽ Rekādám ma lomálag l měi

ng derdárt me gokěim
50 ẽ kau a imul ra despědál’l ra mědál rě Goikúl me l mě galiótěl ⁴ e ngokěim
ẽ kaū a mangá ra gadéng e rikl
a Rěgából, ke mākóng ma kometkú ⁵ 55 ra geimól dlevegěl e ra kiko ⁶ kngikāu ra Iraĩ
mem kerda re me Gelúg ⁷ mem tagalá delsém ⁸ l mo ra Uděs
ẽ ke ngerél ku Melekéiok 60 mě ko bóběra ⁹ dug l tőkói
ẽ ke meleu ku ra đěu uěr rákl ¹⁰
l komtagě re gomú ¹¹ ra kāu
l ta lagád
ẽ l bús ¹² a Medegĩ pēlau ra Pělias ¹³ 65 l kėu ¹⁴ rě gongědėgáděl
ẽ di galmangēm.¹⁵

because he has been thrown out from your real house Ngarekikláng, when they gave you an injured fish,
and these 10 places of Ngarekědám; when they shoot pigeons and come,
then there are one hundred or fifty,
but you walk over to the east side,
to the entrance of Goikúl,
and when the galiótěl-dish comes, then, there are fifty;
but you eat shark outside;
but Rěgěbóng, you want to go and jump,
one more stairway at that time;
I took you from a Iraĩ,
and you were landed in Ngaragelúg,
and you carry your umbrella to Uděs,
and you are now the mouth of Melekéiok,
that you used harsh words.
You now bend the bent mast, because you take revenge for the blows you received,
the one man,
If Medegeĩpēlau would not have been in Pělias,
he sat on the gongedėgáděl-door and only your protector!

Story 201. Kesěkesěngél a Rāklaĩ, heroic chant of a Rāklaĩ, rubak Nr. I of Melekéiok. It refers to the punishment of the place by British warship Direkl mo ungil a pelú ak uderěgei ¹⁶ Ngiratekāu ¹⁷

l mor a Idíd mang korir ¹⁸ a Ibědul ra Melekéiok
5 l di galelengá ¹⁹

¹ imis the expelled one, maráng true.

² Ngirakikláng, the cult house of Medegeĩpēlau in a Iraĩ.

³ a fish, which has injured another one, is considered a sacrifice.

⁴ delicate dish made of ngdul mussels and coconut kernel.

⁵ from omótk to jump; he is a bragger.

⁶ see story 195b the fiřh last verse; deběgel also a sweet disc.

⁷ the fishing Bai Ngaragelúg in Melekéiok.

⁸ from deliūs the umbrella; melugěl to carry; Uděs fam. I in Melekéiok.

⁹ from óboba to use; medúg strong, durable.

¹⁰ górakl the mast.

¹¹ in fact beater, then the blows.

¹² better known dibus absent.

¹³ another great name for a Iraĩ.

¹⁴ from kiei to sit, remain; door..

¹⁵ Your partner, from mangalim to accompany; otherwise he would have been badly off.

¹⁶ from oldúrog to send (to the pace talks),

¹⁷ Rubak IX from Melekéiok.

¹⁸ from okér to ask.

¹⁹ bagělělěu white, bleached.

a le kēamko ¹ Midol ma Rāklai ²
l kol demiu ra gáragar
l kol melátäg a kerdik
a bom klëoáies
10 ě k deklí ³ Gëbirāklai ra Melekeok

When you do not think of Midol and a Rāklaĩ, who probably had been your father in former times,
who probably washed the people with skin disease.
Be quiet!
I bury her, Gëbirāklai from Melekéiok

Story 202. Galdägädägál a ulengĩl ⁴, Story About the Rest, Told by Rekesiváng in Goréör log.: bai 28 III^b illustr. pl. XV.

A Mangerekúr a pteúl a pelú re Ngel'läu, e gogälél ra dil a tal mesesúau ⁵ e mererekrákt ⁶ mesél le lo ra gei ra Ngërair 5 l pekl dälál Ngelläu ng di btił ⁷ ruriúl
ě arsägälil a maremĩd ra l mo Ngërair; ma le bo e Gobagád ra Ngërairng kiei 10 ra kingelél risoís l ngara
pkúl Nërair e melekói ra ngarugér tíreka ra dil l kmu:
rungálek m tougákl ⁸
me soisi ⁹ a pteúlúk!
15 e ngi a sumesmëgeĩ ¹⁰ me ngolekér ¹¹ ra gongingél, e diák, me ngoudertartir ¹² rokúi
l mo ruriul, e diák a kongëĩ meng megëtiterĩr ¹³ me teremĩd 20 e ngi a moga ngikal merekrákt
l kmal mla goróid ruriúl
măng du la re ngí l kmú:
rungálek m tougákl ma mem ¹⁴
soisi a pteúlúk!

Mangerekúr was the village chief of Ngel'läu; one of his female relatives was a little bit crazy and a little bit sick;
and it went to the reef of Ngërair
each old woman from Ngel'lau;
only she hang back with her buttocks, while her female friends went ahead to Ngërair; and when they went sat Gobagád of Ngërair on her rock-seat on the Cape of Nërair and said as follows:
to the first of these women:
Oh child, go to the side
and delouse my head!
She refused,
and she asked the following one, (who said) no,
and she asked one after the other all of them,
until the last one, who all refused,
and she let them go and they left.
Then came this sick one,
she had dropped far behind,
and she talked to her in the following way:
My child, go to the side and delouse my head! —

¹ = kamko you do not think.
² a Rāklaĩ7 Gókerangël, who died around 1860, had married Diraúdës from the house a Idid in Goréör, (see Gor. At. I gen. II) and before, he had adopted Midol. When he resided in Goréör, he was like a father for a Idid and now he offered a Ibëdul some warships against Melekéiok.
³ melákl to bury. a Rāklaĩ says: I want to bury my sister, who has been quite sick.
⁴ from mangĩl to remain, what remained. Ngel'läu, part of Ngivál in Narárd.
⁵ seséi a little bit (WALL.); uáu crazy.
⁶ merákt sick, merekrákt a little bit sick; compare below meketéket wide, mekeketéket not so wide.
⁷ but poss. btił the one behind, which is to say to fall back.
⁸ tougákl to walk on one side of the path.
⁹ dem. from meláis to run.
¹⁰ melmesimog to decline, also ongót; kongeĩto agree.
¹¹ perf. from okér to ask.
¹² oudertáng to glean, to pick up; kaudertáng individually.
¹³ megëreĩ to let go.
¹⁴ mem = kau you.

25 ma merekrákt du la re ngĩl kmú:
gadil, kelék dopengá ¹ ra geĩ!
Gobagáda kmung: ng diak, di ungilpesúl
kau mei! aie? ma dang vaisëi!
meng tougáklál mong meng meláis re ngí 30 l mo mangeskereká ² geĩ, e le Gobagád gomdasúa ³ rarsagalil
l kmu temerekĩng ⁴, e soláe doremi ⁵ gospúl l blábuk ⁶
e msáng meng mo ra kebúrs 35 meng mangemagémes ⁷ aúgul a dúger
e melai a ngdũl meng mekeki ⁸ a galisél
e meremá ⁹ meng du la re ngí kal dilal Gobagád l kmu :
lëké ¹⁰ bëbil e gedeĩme lo dimém?
40 Gobagáda kmung: diák, e rungálek,
kau bom semesemi ¹¹ a gälisém
m ngu l mo remëĩ.
e arsagalil a meremá me teriedáng
l mo ra pelú me temo me tekuk kiel 45 me petók l klebesëĩ.
e kuk mong l mo mangiúl'l ¹²
e a le bo e ng dirék a tekingél Gobagádl uá séra ¹³ le kot l mong
loudertartir ¹⁴ e te di ulengót ¹⁵ 50 e di ngikál merekrákt l nga ruriúl
a kilongeĩ meng lilūt l mei meng meláis.
e arsagalil a remid l mora geĩ
re goróid, e ngi a meláis and the sick one said to her the following:

Mother maybe we come too late to the reef.
Gobagád spoke: this thing is OK,

You come here! — (She) Yes? then it is good! — and she came to the side and deloused her until the onset of high tide at the fishing ground and Gobagád considered, (that) her friends said, they would come and then she sharpened her hibiscus stick and gave it to her for the mangrove swamp;
and she lifted the trunks of the root poles and gathered ngdũl-mussels and filled her basket
and when arrived, she said to her,
this woman Gobagád, the following:
Do you want to have some meat for yourself?
Gobagád spoke: No my child, you close your basket and take it home! —
When her females friends had come, they left for their village and went and then stayed many nights.
(One day) then they went (again) to catch worms.
When they came, (made) again her speech Gobagád just like the last time first to one after the other, yet they refused;
only this sick woman, who was the last one consented, turned around,
and deloused her.
But her female friends went to the reef far away, while she deloused,

¹ dopengáng to come too late, to have come without any right.
² kerik tide, mangeskerekáng high tide has started.
³ gomdás to consider, to think.
⁴ merkong finished, meremáng arrived.
⁵ from merórom to sharpen.
⁶ gosíp spade, stick; blábuk the decorticated hibiscus stick (see story 174).
⁷ mangimer to pick up.
⁸ dem. from omekëk to fill.
⁹ merkóng finished, meremáng arrived.
¹⁰ lëkó, lëké? Question; godóim meat, side dis
¹¹ from mangesimer to close the door.
¹² from geiúl'l the sipunculida worms in the sand of the shore.
¹³ = sei. sel that and ra = that time.

ma mangeskereká gēi
55 ng kuk lul 'lí gospúl msa ¹ meng mo ra ungelél ² a galögól
meng mangiúl 'l, l mekeki a galáis e mora dalál Gobagád meng omsa godimél ma Gobagád gotngákl ³ l kmu 60 kau bomsemesemí a galisém ma lemarsagalím e bomrei
e meremár sagalil ma te kuk remīd l mora pelú ma te kiel meketéket.
e a tára klebesē e te kuk mogál ⁴ 65 mo melóug l bekl dil
e a merekrákt ma ngusél a dilal ⁵ ma lebo gar a Ngeráir
e Gobagád a direk l melekói er tir
l uá irégár e te di ulengót 70 e ngi a kuk meremá merekrákt meng melekó re ngi meng kongei meng mo meng meláis
e a ngusél ma ra bekl dil a melóug,
e ngi a meláis ma Gobagád a dula 75 re ngí l kmu: klukúk
e go bom sálou ⁶ e kegoiěli ⁷ a ulengilém
lěkó dūm ⁸ ra ngelsúm ⁹ ra go merekóng ma ke ngú!
80 ma le merekól smálou
l di tal nglas kung ng soláe mei meng degór loikal me meketéket e ngi a meremá melegelókl ra ngeásek l medūm 85 e a ngusél l dákl degór
meng ma mo gabegep ¹⁰
ngikal ngusél l 'lou semeriár
l mo melai re ngi meng mengám ma merekrákt a mangerár re ngi

and the reef was flooded;
then she (Gobagád) gave her her digging stick,
and she went to the end of the sand and caught worms, she filled her basket went to her mother Gobagád and gave her her meat, but Gobagád refused and said:
You, tie your basket shut,
and when your female friends are here, go home!
When her female friends had arrived, then they went to the village and stayed there a long time.
One day, they went again
to get some fertilizer, all women.
The sick one and her sister in law went also to Ngěráir, and Goagád talked again to them like in former times. They refused, and when the sick one arrived,
she talked to her and she agreed and she came and deloused (her).
Her sister in law and the other women got some fertilizer, while she deloused, and Gobagád said to her the following: tomorrow go to dig (your taro patch), then wait for the rest (the taro shoots).
at once (money) will come out of your field;
when (the work) is done, you take!
When it was finished the digging, was it only a dug out field then;
and then she came and this one stood up and after some time it (the money) was there coming out, pushing away the floor.
Her sister-in-law stood next to her and bent down.
This sister-in-law was greedy and wanted to take it, but it broke,
and the sick one scolded her,

90 meng merengá ¹ mei ngel mūt l goiti ²
e tial tēdóbög ga ngémek
l melegelókl, medūm
l me kebengkángk ³
95 meng mo ka ngmai lěrúng, omngákl; tial mlägám ⁴ lul 'lebóngel
a Guóděl ungīl,
ma tial tēdóbog lulekiu ⁵ uriul
medūm a Búikunlengīl 100 me tengmai ⁶ l mora pelú
meng msibs a Mangerekúr
e soláe ngu a Búikunlengīl ma rukemí ⁷ ra Ibēdul
meng di merúkūm re ngi 105 l okngéměd a udóud
e dimlengesóngěs ⁸ mengótir ⁹ a Jebúkūl
l kmú: merameko mer tial Ngarkldéu
e mo mīlil re Jebúkūle mesá bagés l mlai l ngarengí 110 e dikedá mlimeú
komotábedi ¹⁰ ngu remīd
ng dogelél ¹¹ gorúkūm ra di re gad ra Ngel 'lau ma telkelél ¹² ngi lulengīl
a l' lególeg ¹³ ra ptangg ra Ngel 'lau.

and she was ashamed and threw it again away.
These halves now labored to lift the earth, to come outside, yet, they fell over,
and (the sick one) took (the) two,
gave (them) names; this broken end a Guódělulengīl (“old rest”) and the other half, which later on came along and out came a Búikunlengīl (“boy’s rest”);
and she took them to the village,
and Mangerekúr punched them,
and then he took the Búikunlengīl and exchanged it at a Ibēdul and gave him in exchange.
He spent the money;
since he had not received the full amount, he gave it to a Jebúkūl and said: when you are here in this Ngarldéu and you walk to a Jebúkūl and see a new canoe there,
so it is no longer your canoe;
take it out, take it with you to fill up the change, but only for the people of Ngel ‘lau,
for measuring the rest,
the cutting of the stone back rest of Ngel ‘lau.

Story 203. About Madlútk, Who Climbed Into Heaven ¹⁴.

log.: (bai 11), bai 44 mad.(phot.); heaven: bai 48 II^a illustr. d.-pl. 26^c; bai 95 e., bai 138 w., bai 142 n. illustr. pl. XIIIa. Rainbow: bai 74 illustr. d.-pl. 26^d.

Madlútk from Ngategěróng nearby Ngabúkěd married Diramangal‘lákl, also called Dalál ail‘lói ¹⁵ or Dalál a galīl in the following chants (see story 204).

¹ merúr to be ashamed.

² dem. of mengóit to throw away

³ blengkángk to fall over, part. from omenggank WALL.).

⁴ from mengám to break.

⁵ okiu to go in one direction.

⁶ ngmai dem. from ngu.

⁷ merúkūm to exchange.

⁸ ngěsóngěs short for small change; a Ibēdul did not have enough small change, therefore he gave not enough.

⁹ ngótir to give a beautiful donation.

¹⁰ otóbed to dare to do. In fact even today, Ngel‘lau-people have the right to take away a new canoe(mlai) from a Jebúkul.

¹¹ kedógel to make more. (melegél to augment WALL.).

¹² from telkáel the measuring (part. from melegtuk to crush WALL.).

¹³ All of this used as a comparison.

¹⁴ I found the story completely illustrated on 2 gables, most articulately on the front gable of bai 142 Gosobulngaī in Ngarakeúkl on Peliliou and a bit weathered on the old Kemángělbai 44 in Ngardmaī

¹⁵ after the taro patch a II‘loi, see below.

¹ msáng give him, lul 'lí from merúl

² poss. from uingěl tooth, end.

³ olíngákl to decline.

⁴ mogáng accomplishment: gone.

⁵ gadil mother, dálál his mother; dil woman, dilál his wife.

⁶ mesálou to dig the taropatch, smálou the dug up pieces, like meat loaf; the excavated field a nglás poss. gelsúl.

⁷ dem. from mangīl “to wait”, therefore also the “rest” ulengīl, that is to say to plant taro saplings.

⁸ medūm to come out, for instance from a water hole.

⁹ mesálou to dig out the taro patch, smálou the pieces that were dug out, like meat loaf, the dug out field a uglás poss. gelsúl.

¹⁰ mogaběgep to bend down.

The rubak of Mangal’lang decided a keratórog or kerilatoróg ¹, this is a punishment for both marriage partners, when a woman from a great place marries a man from a small place.

Madlutk moved to his wife to Mangaláng, yet, when the messengers of the rubak wanted to chase him away, the high ranking woman was willing to move away with her husband. Thus, both of them moved to Ngategërong. When the rubak heard this, they sent messengers to Ngrīl, in order to ask for the support of this place to destroy Ngategërong. When Madlutk heard about this, he said to Diramangal’lákl: Let us go together to heaven. But, when you see your place from high above through the kim-shell, won’t you be sad?— She, though, said: No! — Thus, he took his lime-stick ², set it on the ground and both of them climbed up to heaven.

In the first part of heaven, called Telngatk raiángěd, two men invited them to eat boiled bananas with them. This they gladly did, here was also the kim-shell, of which he had told her and the houses of the god of heaven, about which we have reported in story 19 about Terkélel. Then they came into the second part Gërëgálp ³. Madlutk always walked ahead, because he wanted to show her everything. There was a bathing pond in the taro patch, the diong Gougabīl and next to a small house was a money producing betel creeper — called kebúi ra gougád, because the leaves had small faces — they saw this with astonishment. The woman was afraid.

In the third part Gonědě a gálp they found a big taro patch. She said to Madlutk: I want to have some taro saplings from the women. — He asked: What kind? — She replied: the rúl’l-kind. — He, however said: Wait a little bit, in the following part you will find the Takebesengīl-kind that grows in one night. She also saw a red tree and asked about it. Madluk said: This is a sis-dracaena, belonging to Boi, who is also called Gorekím ⁴. In the fourth part Gongěoaě a galp he showed her the rul’l-kind of taro and she took it with her. If planted today, you can already eat it tomorrow.

The money growing tree palāu re gúr ⁵ was also there and the snake filled with money. People only had to hit it, in order to get money. In each one of 3rd. and the 4th. part is one house, the heavenly bai Madálbai and Lomóket, where people dance for the sick galid spirit (on bai 44 both of them are in the 5th. part), the heavenly bai Madálabai and Lomóket, where people dance for the sick galid spirit. Both logúkl show dracaena-trees, blossoming they bring rain, like the meas-fish ⁶, and frigate birds are in the sky. In Gongěim a galp, the fifth part, he said: Here is the taro patch Ngurulekí that is as big as the a Ilúi -field in Ngabúkěd. She, however, thought, that the one in heaven was bigger. Here, they took a bath in a large diong-pool. In the sixth part Gongělólom galp was heavy rain and mēas-fish. He said: Here you are not allowed to ask, for this is a galid spirit-place. — They arrived at bai ra galdóiog and when she heard thundering she wanted to ask, but he said: Wait until we are in the seventh, there you will see the thunder. In seventh heaven Gongěuíd a galp they saw a man smashing two stones and every time when they smashed, it thundered. However, when he threw a stone after another man and hit him, then there was lightening. Then they reached the eighth part Gongěāi a gálp, where, according to Ngardmaū’s picture, thunder and lighting are situated. Then they came into the ninth one, Gongětíu a galp, where, also in Ngardmaū, galid spirit Gorekím tried to spear Madlutk, but did not hit him. Finally, they came into the tenth part, Gongětrúiüg a galp, to heaven’s house called Ngaramelóměs, “place of light”. It was so beautiful there, that they stayed. a Ugéliángěd, the god of heaven, lived here and they found all the good things there.

¹ In detail in KUB. IV, p. 84. There it is called tmorok, tugmóroch “to slip” by WALL

² On the picture on pl. XIIIa he has a small supporting beams at his foot, as if he had struck roots

³ galp short for galipěl section, for instance slice of taro; gerě = gěring two.

⁴ on the left side is Boi depicted as a rainbow, see story 11

⁵ In the picture he is standing on the left side. The peels of the fruit were money, the kernels are almonds. The women are looking for them and they throw away the peels, because they represent no value for them

⁶ also written as a Il’lói, from where Dalálail’lói has her name.

The Chants of Mad lutk.

1.

I cut things for my cupboard
made of breadfruit wood in Umereu,
but then they sent Misau,
he brought a message, and the village
got together and they ransacked our house;
Up, let us go to Ngarard!

2.

I cut things for my cupboard
made of breadfruit wood in Umereu,
but she then sent Misau, Ngril came and the village
got together and they ransacked our house.
Up, let us go to Ngarárd.

3.

What kind of raucous talk is this in Mangal’láng,
the noise swelling and falling down on the women’s dance place, only I do not want to see it;
I go to Ngarárd!

4.

And when we go to Ngarard,
I bow down
and talk: mother, father, Risóis is your galid spirit,
and Mlagél is our goddess,
she takes me to Telngakt and I look at it.

5. She:

Madló, Madlutk hey,
do tell me in detail (about it) about the magic land at the edge of heaven.
there is the human betel creeper,

1 ak melél ¹ sěláseg ra pngék
 l medú l di Ngaraumere ²
 e toderegí ku ³ Misau
 meng mei klumög ma pelú
5 a dokngě ⁴ ma blid mogetekláng
 ě boderě re Ngarárd.

ak melél seláseg ra pngek
 l medú l di Ngaraumerě
 e toderegí ku Misau
10 meng mei Ngril ma pelú
 a dokngě ma blid mogetekláng
 e boderě ⁵ re Ngarárd.

Ngara i tie lägetel ⁶
 ra (re)Ngaramangal’lákl 15 l ngukókl morbáb e geiesékl mērióu
 mě goleikl rarđil
 a di gětikók lōmís;
 ak rīdu re Ngarárd.

Ma debó ra Ngarárd, 20 ak medúrs ⁷ umitěg rěngák
 l kmú: gade ⁸, gadaíáng,
 a Risóis lě gědmíu
 ma Mlagél le gědmam,
 a di ngoikák ⁹ l mora Telngakt

25 ě ma ak mesárěg

Madló, Madlutk iá
 diói mugiskák rseī ¹⁰
 l mangetitěgátl ngara ugúl a iángěd.
 sě kăbúi rě gougád

¹ melés to cut, deláseg wooden idol, totem animal, melěsegáseg “to cut many things”; pup cupboard.

² Umerěu blai in Mangal’lakl.

³ oldúrog to send; ku then.

⁴ dokngei from dmak to get together.

⁵ boderěi often used in daily life.

⁶ măgétel raucous, the talk, because they wanted to punish him.

⁷ medúrs actually “to lie”, omíteg lopsided inclined, deferential.

⁸ gadei- mother

⁹ ngoikak from ngu, to take.

¹⁰ from omgais to tell news; rsei an end of things, poss. rsél.

30 l klidm gad a ugúl
 ě klidm galíd a rsél
 ě kmú le bó likrid ¹
 ng gadú ma gorīg

34 a Dălálail ‘lóiang ² mekúl
 mělákmō kereker

35 a sě kăbúi ra gougád?
 l klidm u gad a ugúl
 ě klidm galíd a rsél?
 a tedbói ³, a mo gěrúr
 a měklěgél a Diraulegúl

40 ě má Dira u lěgeiěp

Madló Madlút k iá
 diói borugél
 mě mugólt re ngak a gabīl
 ma metětugél a ráel

45 l tǝngól l mo ra meséi ⁴ měkól dolēngetngít a ditéd ra remesusúed ra ngalekél a rul’l.

Ng mongără oá rul’l
 ě kedě góit a gokál e kebesē ⁵ 50 l ditéd ardil l di dē bo dē sepngí
 ě á dēgēsēpí, ě dēdēlemí ě a dē bekīs, ng kelól

ě rigebě, tolóug armekél
 a takebesengil ě kedmó 55 o tebēdi iá mlāi
 l mōmsá ra Bakēbui
 l mo melīlt ra rengúl
 a di ngebói rāmāk.

ě rigebé ked ě kolbád

60 e kom kokerengí a bageie
 ma lomóket ě komómelá melīl

mě mēng rāmāk l mo ra mesei
 l lekó lak l bol tú
 a dekovádek ě ra dait.

¹ ikr in fact “outside”; but ikrak “the back to me”, etc.

² taboo for his wife, because of the galid spirit present there, the “mother of a Il’lói” taro patch in Ngabúked.

³ tedboi unexplained.

⁴ meséi taro patch, poss. meklegél.

a human face on the trunk,
a galid’s spirit’s head on the tip and if he shows us the back, it is yellow and red.

He:

Dălálail‘lói, it is forbidden, do not ask:

Is this the human betel creeper?

a human face on the trunk,
a galid’s spirit’s face on the tip?

A branch is above

the taro patch of Diraulegúl and Diraulěgeiěp.

6. She:

Madlo, Madlutk hey,

do go as the first one and show me the bend

and the sideway,

that drops steeply down to the taro patch,

so that we ask for our saplings,

that they break off Rul’l’s saplings

7. He:

Away with the Rul’l,

we throw away Gokál kebesē,

our saplings, you women; when we only dug them out,

so we cut them off, so we plant them and when we awake, they are grown.

8.

Girls, we take the leaves for Takebesengil, we go and push it (into the water)

we pass Bakēbui,

to chose according to his heart

only the best leaves’ fertilizer.

9.

Girl, we are lying down,

you are going to guard the pandanus blossoms, and once they are open you have to watch the falling down,

then bring them as fertilizer for the taro patch

so that would not come sickness to the saplings

65 Mengí ue ke mesárěg
 a telegalp ¹ l mēláoes?
 a pertél ² a Pelau
 a debó mob kaisí a kim mo músa Madálabai
70 ma l blim ra Limeī ě klmángěl ³.

Madló Madlutkiá
 diói borugél
 mě mugólt re ngak a gabīl
 ma metětugél a ráel

75 kelě do gělěgēlī ⁴ a melegó rě Gěrěgálp a Mlagél mě Gobildép
 l mangá rongél a gaiós
 a bol mád a róiěg

80 Madló, Madlutkiá
 diói mugiskák rsél
 merěrúmk l ngara ugúl a iángěd.
 a Dalálail ‘lóiang
 mekúl mēlák mo kerekér
 l di koiě ra blil
 e kuk di melīl ra mekesóng a l tu a rengúl ng melólk
 l dolkí a mēláoes
90 e mo tuó ra dilúges

Madló, Madlutkiá
 diói mugiskák rsél.
 magnetitěgát l ngara ugúl a iángěd?

a Dalálail ‘lóiang

95 e sě mēás ⁵ l kál l di kelir a Risal’l ma di l bol diól’l ěng metórd re ngí a dělál
 mong óudekdik a delél ⁶

¹ telegalp (see above galp) a section, for instance a page of a book, here a part of heaven, equally mēláoes, otherwise the lower one, for instance in the ground, the lake etc.

² omart to hide. omkais to open. omés to see.

³ blai poss. blil his house. lmángěl to weep.

⁴ keléng maybe; ologelógěl to surprise a woman in the bath, without having shouted beforehand: this is obviously a warning!

they bathe in the diong Gougabīl (gabīl the curtain, partition).

⁵ a kind of Theuthis rabbitfish, which can appear in great numbers, as fish of the rainmaker Boi. Risal’l supposedly was a man from Ngēsáng, where in former times were a lot of mēás; now they in the vicinity of a Irai.

⁶ oudekdik to feel the movement of the child; diěl the belly.

10.

Why are you looking around in the part of heaven down there?

Hidden is Pelau,

but when you go and open it, the shell,

then you see Madálabai and your house Limeī, and you weep!

11. She:

Madló Madlutk hey!

just go as the first one,

and show me the bent

and the sidepath;

maybe you surprise them

when taking a bath in Gěrěgálp

Mlagél and Gobildép,

they eat the rays of the sun,

when she dies in the afterglow.

12. She:

Madló, Madlutk hey!

do tell me in detail

about the thunder at the edge of the sky.

Dalálail‘lói,

it is forbidden, do not ask

remains in his house and then only walks in the yard;

when he is in the mood, he pushes and pushed into the depth, and then walks out to the north.

13. She:

Madló, Madlutk hey!

do tell me in detail

(What is) the mist at the edge of heaven?

He:

Dalálail‘lói !

it the mēás-fish, the dish — their dish — of Risal’l;

and when he carries,

then his mother is angry with him and when feels movements in the belly,

likó tuó ra toágěł
100 l mo tungí re Kedlúkl ¹
l di gul e ma iólt.

ě Madló, Madlutk iá di oi mugiskák rsél klpěpěkúpěl ² l ngara ugúl a iángěd?

105 mekúl melák mokerekér
ě tirekě rubagád ³ l mo merú a galebúgěp
l mě mató mětěg melái e kid a bo dě blals 110 ě kerdí debál
losĩk argadál ěóuluáděs.

The women in heaven:

Dalálail'lóiang
kau a ptartír e tarekíd
ě mě medongá kelám 115 l di telík lě gogóiěs ⁴
ě dokér ngará gomul'lap ⁵, l melipěk gogemíu
ardelál ⁶ ěóuluáděs

Kemám a ki mul'lap l melipěk 120 gogemám ar delál ěóuluáděs
a teluó lěgeiúiěs gěiúěsél ⁷ a, kědám
uka rigebeĩ, ma vúiěd ⁸ a degetúr ma teluól sěpsáp ⁹ ra mekesó
děbědělí ¹⁰ meng besópěs

125 Madló Madlutkiá
diói mugiskák rsél

he goes out to the entrance of the reef, and she (mother) brings him to Kedlúkl and there is rain and wind.

14.She:

Madló, Madlutk hey!
do tell me in detail
(What kind of) a crowd is this at the edge of heaven.

He:

It is forbidden, do not ask.
those are the gobagád, who pick up the Galebúgěp-pieces of money, that they throw away;
if we take them, punishment hits us
and we are alarmed,
searching the people of the earth below.

15.

Dalálail'lói!
You are one of them and one of us,
come, we eat our dish,
that is only half-baked,
and we ask, what you need,
to draw lines on your legs,
down at the women of the earth.

She:

We need to draw the lines
on our legs, the women of the earth, a bone, the bone of the frigate bird,
you girls, and resin we smoke and a costus-trunk in the yard, which we pull out, to serve as a beater.

16. She:

Madló, Madlutk hey,
do tell me in detail,

¹The entrance for canoes at Ngareklim, the southern cape of the island Ngarekedlúkl, on its eastern side is the big entrance to the bay of Iraĩ, also called Uleúl'ł, like the one of Ngatpáng; the měás goes with the rain and the wind.

²*klpekúpěl* crowd (of people).

³*tirekél* plur. of ngikel that one; rubagád plur of gobagád female galid spirit; they collect the fruits, as mentioned above, brake them open, and throw away the kernels that are pieces of money. The ones above only have to pick them up, the ones at the below have to borrow them

⁴*melongóiěs* to cook.

⁵*ólap* to use, to have.

⁶*ardelál* in fact “his mother” the earth.

⁷*geiúiěs* bone. See the many frigate birds in the sky in Ngarakeúkl part 2—4.

⁸*vúiěd*, the milk respectively the resin of the plant that gives the burnt soot for the tattooing needle.

⁹*gei sepsáp* the ginger plant costus, its green stem serves as a beater for the tattooing pick.

¹⁰*oltóběd* to pull.

meungs l di kordáng?

what kind of an island is this, that glows so?

He:

This are the falling (leaves) of the dracaena, Gesigákl is my dracaena, in Mutngabárd in Madálabai and Lomókět.
Good is the view!
Gobil'lěgalíd brings her blessing, and she talks to me: You are here, you are taken,
and now you cannot cut off their laughing,
while they sit in Madálabai and Lomókět.
This is a beautiful spectacle!

Story 204. The Hero With Wings

a Ugél re gulsiáng.

log.: bai 46 s., bai 75 w., bai 117 w.¹, bai 151 mad.

In a Jebúkūl in the district Ngaregolóng, in front of the house a Imogoáng stood a breadfruit tree, which grew at the edge of the gólbed-stone pavement. He only carried one fruit. The woman of the house had only daughters. One day, when these had gone to the taro patch, Diraimogoáng took the breadfruit to her house, because it was nearly ripe. There she hid it until it was ripe. As soon as this was the case, the old woman gave the fruit to her daughters to cook it together with the taro. When the breadfruit was cooked, the old woman put it into a basket, hung it in the house. and did not think any longer of it. After some time Diraimogoáng remembered it again; she took the basket down and put it on the floor. The fruit split in two pieces and a small thing was lying in the middle, not bigger than a lizard but in a human form. The woman placed it on a gotúngěł-bag and this one into her basket. Then she went to do her chores and plaited mats.

After some time, when she looked at it again, the creature was considerable bigger, and therefore, she placed it on a rongór-mat for the back. However, already in the evening of the same day, it had outgrown this mat, and therefore, had to be placed on the leaf sheath of an areca palm. When the daughters came home, the mother told them to hurry with the preparation of the food. They cooked taro and also the two breadfruit halves. After dinner, when the old woman had eaten the breadfruit, she told them that she had given birth to a child. The daughters shouted, how this could be, you have not been pregnant! Where is the child? The old woman showed it to them in the corner of the house, where she had placed the leaf sheath. The daughters found the boy, took him into the middle of the house and played with him. They held him above the fire in order to warm him, and so he continued to grow. Even today, when children are growing fast, people still say:
tőkór a malau re ngí ra ngau! as if people would warm it on the fire!

The following day, the boy played already in the yard, and everyone of a Jebúkūl was surprised about it. On the day after, he was already in the act of going to the rubak-bai, but they warned him: Do not walk so far away from the house, or they will kill you. — So he turned around. On the third day, the boy walked around a Jebúkūl, just for his amusement. When he saw the woman Galĩl in blai Makau, he married her. Afterwards he has visited Ngabiúl, then Mangal'láng, where he has visited blai re gulsiáng. The house was lonely, because a galíd had devoured all the children. When the woman of the house saw the young man she called out to him: Come in quickly, there is a malicious galíd.

¹ Bai 117 has been depicted many times (see index of bai), therefore, no reproduction was included here. One can see the hero in the air, hit by a spear, etc.; there also is a log., d.-pl. 15f, about the breadfruit and the child

— He asked: Of what kind is he and where does he come from? — She replied: He comes like the thunder. — The young man said: When do you think will he come again? — She answered: I think after tomorrow. — So the young man went with a kikói-shell behind the house, cut some tiválag-throwing sticks, and said to the woman: Very well, I am going home to Jebúkûl and after tomorrow I will be back. — She repeated: But you have to be careful because of the galíd. The day after next, when the young man stayed again in blai re gulsigáng, a huge bird in the form of a flying fox came with a thundering sound. It sat down on the tree next to the house. The boy watched it through a hole in the wall of the house, then he went outside, took his clubs and threw one at the bird, which entangled itself in the rope it always carried with it. A second club also hit and made the monster howl. Soon it cried: Leave me alone; I will come down and tell you something. — Arriving on the ground, it continued talking: I did not know that you belong here. I thought all children of this house were dead. So, I will give you my wings and I will return to heaven and will be your galíd and the guardian of entire Mangal‘láng. At the celebration of a mur-feast, when you drink syrup water from the iléngě̌l-barrel, then drink first to me and call my name Gosalmelé̌g!¹ — Then the boy took the wings and called himself Ugél regulsiáng. From then on he lived in Blai re gulsíang in Mangal‘láng and got his wife Galīl from Jebúkûl.

Around this time Mangal‘láng was scheming how to destroy Ngivál. With the help of its galíd Ngirungór Ngivál had oppressed everyone, especially Ngardmaũ and Ngaregolóng. They had to transport all driftwood ² crosswise to it, had to pay tribute, had to deliver women, etc.³. When Ngardmaũ came to Mangal‘láng to recruit this place for the fight against Ngivál, Mangal‘láng agreed. All people from Mangal‘láng first sailed to Ngardmaũ, and from there they marched over land to Ngivál. However, while sailing there, they were attacked by Ngarárd-people, who came out at low tide and threw their spears at those of Mangal‘láng. Ugél regulsiáng took off with his wings, so they could not hit him. On the contrary, he speared one of the enemies, so that all of them ran away.

After their arrival in Ngardmaũ, people from Ngaregolóng united with those of this district, and now they moved together against Ngivál. However, people from Ngarárd had also arrived there for the fight. At low tide, people fought again on the reef. Yet, when Ugél regulsiáng had soared up, a Rgamagéd ⁴ from Ngësang hit him with his spear in the breast, so that he died in the air and fell down to earth landing on the headland Pkul ngěráir. This rubak from Ngësang had learned from his mother how to throw spears, she herself had seen a black crane doing so. People from Mangal‘láng brought the body to Ngivál into blai II a Ibaĩ in Ngaragě̌lūk, where he was laid out and lamented.

Then they transported the corpse to Ngardmaũ, and from there they brought it to Mangal‘láng, where the funeral feast was held. When this one had ended, the old woman of blai re Gulsíang took the intestines out of the body, dried the body over the fire and stored it up in their blai. Every time, when a funeral feast took place in Mangal‘láng, they took the mummy down, placed it next to the other body and said: The feast is for a Ugél and the other dead one! — After the feast the dead person was buried and the mummy was returned to its place. However, when this woman got old and sick, they transported the mummy to her taro patch Dalál a galīl and buried it there in an a iléngě̌l, a syrup-water-barrel.

Chant 204. Gěsóls ra Ugél regulsiáng.

Chants of Ugél regulsiáng, narrated by Ilemasáng in Ngrīl.

1.(at the preparation for the departure)

¹ see Melekéiok.

² According to KUB. VIII, p. 162 the driftwood Kotháor (got áor) is the trunk of a banana tree.

³ see story 60 about Teguliaũr; Ngirungor is galíd of Ngaragě̌lūk in Ngivál.

⁴ According to some other information, it was rub. II a Regěvúi from Ngěsáng.

Dě́lál agagalīl ¹, e rúbál, di rokié ² bagě́lě́k
i klemíngel a geimák
e klmúdel a ptelúk
5 ě ra krekesě́sě́lk ³ ailekó rekāũ, ě Dalál a galēĩ
l mil vė́geĩ a riúr ⁴
ma lolieklung ⁵ ra kebekūl ⁶ ě te kmó
Ugél lěbě lebó ra klóbak
10 ě kid goldekédek ⁷
ě ra kelé dilak dogudĩ ⁸ a maráel gad malterekél ⁹ a blekátě́l a dilak kláia ¹⁰, mě di lak répet di mogúd lė́gě́tıl ¹¹ bekl 15 lě gatıl a pelú ě ngi
a le mě gotiúl ¹² ě te kmú
Ugél mě le bo ra klóbak
l melóbog ra mieg
ng di mogúd lě gě́tıl bekl 20 l di gě́tıl a blai, ě kid
a le mě godiúl ě ngu diulél a pelú, ě kid te kmú: Ugél ě ¹³ Terúsenggáng
ě mě debó ra klóbak l melóbög ě ra mámel
ě re kó di momungúr ¹⁴
25 ě midevékl ra rebā ¹⁵
l sógei a morgeĩer l búög ¹⁶
l ngarau iáol ¹⁷
mě mědiu gě́b ngĩ ¹⁸
Terekói mesá dalám

¹ his wife, see also story 203, ě rubal.

² = rokíu all; he gave everything to his wife, so that he could only have one hand tattooed.

³ The word is not clear; maybe from kekerél sagál small man.

⁴ The sense is not clear bluógel-milugeĩ all agree; a riúr line to catch shark.

⁵ meliákl to make a knot, for instance in a coconut frond.

⁶ dúu is more common. When the quickly grown hero got the title Klagád I bai from blai Ngaragulsiáng, the family members said they would take it upon themselves to look for a servant; he, however, was not popular, because he was too young to be a rubak. His wife, therefore, did not want him to accept the title.

⁷ from melekė́dek to cover.

⁸ maybe from orrė́ged to hold fast WALL.

⁹ from tmúruk to arrive; blek..

¹⁰ melaĩ to take, to give which is to say: he is paid by relatives and friends.

¹¹ gatıl does not want, does not like.

¹² from otiúr to proclaim.

¹³ young man, to whom a Ugél said he should come along to the council, in order to carry home his portion.

¹⁴ from mangang to eat.

¹⁵ ngelóng in front, rebái behind the house.

¹⁶ mordúl, short form; sogei from masógog to pick.

¹⁷ expression in Nagregolóng, in the s. iáieg for the water-dripper on the palm trunks, to gather rain water.

¹⁸ from ólab to take.

Delál agagalīl, oh god, (took) all my pieces of money;
only to tattoo my hand,
the cut off hair of my head,
when I was young,
went to you, Dalál a galīl;
she agreed to the shark-line,
and they knotted the title and said Ugél becomes a rubak,
and we want to cover.
Maybe we cannot find a wandering man,
the money presents are coming for the chiefs,
when I cannot pay, then he will not fall,
not everybody loves him,
the place does not love him.
When they proclaim the part, they say:
Ugél comes to the council of the chiefs,
they divide the tropical almond dish;
but not everybody loves him,
the blai does not love him, but we do.
During the distribution the place takes his part,
but we shout: Ugél, Terúsenggáng should go to the council to the distribution of the mamel-fish;
only you eat
and then you go around behind the house
and pick long betel nuts, which are at the water-dripper;
bring them here, so that I take them.
Terekoi, see your mother,

30 *l ngara Mesë ra gosm*¹
ë lëgabëğep l smálou

who in the taro patch Gosm is staring down and taking out the marl.

Terekoi replies:

*a dik bo, e gǎǎde, ng gabēǵep
l smǎlou l ngara Mesēi ra gosm
e lēgabēǵep l smǎlou Klebókeltmi ²
35 a metángela Guó ³ ra kedueráol*

When I left, father, she looked down, slamming on the taro patch Gosm;
it looks down, lifting the silt Klebóketlmi.
and it is going downhill to a Guóng to the channel.

(Ready to move from Blai re gulsiáng to Ngardmâu.)

tebedék ⁴ re Gulsiángak mlo rióu ⁵
l gamát a lisél ma bugél Terekói ë ng Bai gëbül ⁶
a dorolú ⁷ më dë geikung 40 ma de ngára ⁸ Merés ⁹
ak mlo rióu l mangáus re ngak
ë mangīl, l diak ko mei ¹⁰
mau kuk maráel
dorólú më dë geikú
45 ma de ngára Tegodebei ¹¹
ngëru lë metáp ¹² gogik r tial kadikm re ngák l mēlīng ¹³ a kodál
dorólú më dë geikú
ma de ngára Didlbád ¹⁴
50 ë ak mlo rióu l mangáus rengak ë gamaū uëriúel ¹⁵
ë di mangīl, l diak ko mei
mau kuk maráel
a dorolú me dë geikú
55 ma de ngára rióu Remáng ¹⁶ ak mlo rióu l mangáus re ngak
ë mangīl l diak ko mei
mau kuk maráel

When I left Gulsíáng, I remained praising Terekoi's coconuts and betel nuts;
he is very poor.

When we left and approached and reached Merés,
I remained and prepared a small chew for me
and waited, but you did not come;
then I went (on),
we went and approached
and reached Tegodebeĩ twice my foot bumped against, this right one,
for me a sign of death;
we went and approached
and reached Didlbád
I stayed and prepared a small chew for me, looked back,
and waited but you did not come then I went and we went and approached and reached Remáng down below,
and I stayed and prepared a small chew for myself,
and waited, but you did not come,
and then I left.

¹ meséi taro patch, situated at the path from Ngrīl to Ngabiúl below; Terekoi, the son of Ugél.

²also Telboket l mi, or short ar Bóket l mi, the rubak-women of Mangal‘láng.

³rubak I; meténgél to go down, to Goketól, in order to take leave from the ones who will travel to the fight in Ngivál; kederáol

⁴*tuóběd* to go outside.

⁵ iou “below”, my translator said, “I stood still”, maybe all this means “to crouch”.

⁶poor, because the father has to die and leaves him behind.

⁷from maráel to go, to march, see line 221.

⁸or written dengá ra, maybe from oldingel to visit.

⁹ a blai and the bush around Gulsiáng.

¹⁰his wife.

¹¹ a small bathing place next to the blai at the path.

¹² from tuáp to knock.

¹³ according to WALL. to fail, sinking of a ship.

¹⁴ head of the trail at the rubak-bai.

¹⁵ uriúl in the back, back.

¹⁶ an iliud-pavement at bai Jórmang.

60 dorohú me dē geiku *ma de ngára Ubail kesúk*¹ ak mlo reóu l mo omrebár
ē mangīl, l diak ko mei,
mau kuk maráel

65 *mě de ugá ra Gadesētuēlei*²
ak mlo riou l mangáus re ngak
ě mangīl l diak ko mei
mau kuk maráel

70 *a dorohi me dē geikū ma tebedék ra Ker 'róng³
ak mlo riou l mangáus re ngak
ē mangīl l diák ko mei mau kuk mareael*

a dorolú me dē geikú
74 ma de ngára Gasél ngēbáng
the last 3 lines like in 5.

a dorolú me dē geikú
ma de ngára Teitai ⁴
 the last 3 lines like before.

85 *a dorohi me dē geikú ma de ngára Kēam*⁵
*ak mlo rióu l melím a ra ē mangīl, l diak ko mei
mau kuk maráel*

like 7. instead of Teitai here Gësegíl a vék ⁶.

in the same way, instead of Teitai here Bab ra Gokětól “About Gokětól”.

a dorolú me dē geikú
ma de ngára Bab ra Gokétól 95 ě ngolegāu⁷ a ngás
mak mesengē depsél gongór

¹ the now derelict path leading up to bai Ngërsóng.

²The western head of the trail in Kēklaū that leads out to the heathland, built under the leadership of Tueleī; they had come too late for the construction and now made themselves the enlargement and enhancement.

^{3/4} Savanna on the way to the landing place Gokětól, on the west coast.

⁵ A piece of savanna, The word means “the comb of the rooster”

⁶ olegau singing

⁷from dúps the stump

3.
We went and approached
and reached Ubailkesúk,
I stayed and pissed;
I waited, but you did not come
and then I left.

4.
We reached the stone path of Tuělēi,
I stayed, prepared a small chew for myself
and waited, but you did not come;
and then I left.

5.
We went and approached
and reached Ker'róng, and I stayed, preparing a chew for myself
and waited, but you did not come;
and then I left.

6.
We went and approached and reached Gasél ngěbáng

7.
We went and approached
and reached Teitai.

8.
We went and approached
and reached Kěam.
I waited and drank some water
and waited, but you did not come;
and then I left.

9.

10.
/ "About Gokětól".

11.
We went, and we approached,
and we reached Bab ra Gokětól.
it sang the casuarina,
and I saw the stump of the pandanus mau kmú: ng kâu l maráel mei

mau kuk maráel

a dorolú me dē geikú
100 ma tengelék ¹ rē Gokētól ē tē geilungékl ² ardīl
a bagīl m kuk mogár ³
a dibús ē rualél ⁴ a Dalál a galīl
a rengúl gosmegál

105 a dorolú me dē geikú
ma tengelék rē Gokētól ak ulsús ⁵ ē riēungél a pelāu
l mo kiē ra gádes ē uelengúl ⁶

ngara ke lmángel ē gogelél 110 l melsúm a rengúm ē dió berekí ⁷ a madám
r tiál sokediá ⁸ ma géd ⁹ ē tē di dertá ē ruégád ¹⁰
l kmúgēl ¹¹ gokau lotengelíd ¹² ra kederáol

115 ngára ke lmángēl ē ē gogelél l melsúm a regnúm
ē di o berekí a mādám
r tiál melús ¹³ ra kabékl
ē di tekil ¹⁴ a klebekól ¹⁵

120 ē makmó melengét ra begedék ¹⁶ ē medē ra lild

a tekgék ¹⁷ ra Gokētól

¹meténgēl to descend, in fact to the landing place Gokētól on the west coast.

²chisngékl to look around WALL.; the women and relatives, who had come to say farewell.

³mogang come.

⁴from uriul in the back, in fact ulél.

⁵osús to bend down. Everyone went stooped or sat out of respect for the big crowd and did not stand around. gēungél under.

⁶olengúl to rest.

⁷merákl to spread WALL.

⁸from meséked to block (place) WALL. which is to say the crowd, which blocks the place.

⁹géd the flat of the reef, here for land.

¹⁰plur. of gogád sister, see Vol. 2.

¹¹from melúgel to carry on the head.

¹²from meténgel; otengelák to descend with me.

¹³melús to go onboard in crowds; kluús full canoe.

¹⁴from oltak to embark.

¹⁵therefore the word Clöbbergöll in SEMPER's book; in fact a friendship alliance for 2 men, then also for gáldebégel.

¹⁶bágād the protruding poles, open on the top, on which the punts, spears, etc. were deposited.

¹⁷probably from omitókl to turn.

and said: So you come here!

and then I left.

12.

We went, and we approached

and I descended to Gokētól

they looked around, the women,

if his wife might have come,

but Dalál a galīl was not there behind him;

her heart was unknown to him.

13.

We went, and we approached

and I descended to Gokētól;

bent I went underneath a pelāu-tree and sat down on the path and took a rest.

14.

Why are you crying, brother?

About what worries your heart?

Let your eye roam around

on this crowd, on the land;

there are only few who have sisters, who carry the provisions, they descend with us to the channel.

15.

Why are you crying brother!

About what worries your heart?

Let your eye roam around over this war canoe full with people, only the men's club embarked;

I go to take my place on the bed of poles.

and I will die from a spear.

16.

My embarkation in Gokētól,

ak di kria oá ma géd

ak di goē ¹ Ngeru laoáng ²

125 l melsúm arengúk

l melátk ra Mangal'lákl

ng derágel ³ ra tal a gád.

ng tagá mo klsókes ⁴ a loráel artelul

do l kesú ⁵ me dē geikú

130 ma de ngára Galengél ⁶

a borióu mē dolíu ⁷

ēk du gēlél ⁸ sēsei

l ngára rengúk, r dengereī ⁹

mē kuk dēlūt ¹⁰

135 dol kesú me dē geikú ma de ngára

Gomegelél

e borióu mē dolíu ēk du gēlél sēsei

l ngára rengúk ērteló ¹¹ mē kuk dēlūt.

140

.....

145

.....

150

155

.....

.....

160

¹from gamaū to look.

²The island on the west coast.

³a leaking roof, so that water dripped into the house.

⁴The bamboo platform of the canoes, where the commanders are sitting, here commanders themselves.

⁵from melikes to punt.

⁶a beach.

⁷mēliu to push the bamboo in.

⁸gēleī this.

⁹ar dengeréngēr the fools, people from Ngrīl are called like this, because they had bad manners. He wanted to send them home, but they still went.

¹⁰from lmūt to return.

¹¹= ar Telūl people from Mangal'láng

I turn the back to the land and look to Nguru leáng;

full of sorrow is my heart,

it thinks of Mangal'láng

it cannot miss one man.

Who will be his leader, when the young people go?

17.

We punted and approached and reached Galengél,

we stop and push in the punt;

I just say so much,

what lies in my heart, you are fools,

and then we turn back.

18.

(small deep water spot close to the beach)

(translation see 17).

19.

Gēlegūs (a cape)

20.

Gorakitap (a cape)

21.

Rongór (a cape)

22.

Tungd (a cape)

23.

a Ulálag (a cape)

24.

Ungelél (at the channel a Urúng)

25.

Ngēveiu (a rocky cape south of a Urúng)

26.

Madal ngateluáng (a channel to the south)

27.

Ngarekēsáng (a channel to the south)

165	28. Kloultaog (village in Ngarárd)
170	29. Ngartúkür (village in Ngarárd)
	30. Gongikiúl (a deep water spot)
175	31. Pkula dúdës (cape)
	ë do l kesú me dë geikú ma tungéd ¹ rë Ngeru vëráng ² ë te matenglá rër Galdeged ³ 180 ë lë galtákl ⁴ a kár ë kol mla raiká oá Dalál a galīl, me kelongélta madál ⁵ ng vë áika gebegīl	32. We punt and approached, we went in to Ngëruvëráng and they descended, the ar Galdeged, and carry on the handle syrup- water (bottles). If only Dalál a galīl would be here, it would observe her eye these good marriage customs.

Up to here is the chant of Ugélregulsiáng. Now a man in the channel of Ngardmaū reminds him to come quickly, for Ngivál is nearly lost.

	ë Ugëm kerdá ra mlai 185 l mo melegó ra goeáovël ⁶ mai a iaóed re kau ë më debó ra pelú ë Ngëvál goregedúl ⁷ luëá l mángel l búik. Ugél talks again:	33. Ugél, come on shore from the canoe, go and bath at the water pipe off the froth of the ocean, then we go into the village, because Ngivál is in a hurry, like a weeping child.
190	a gëdúk l pedógël iá kesim leká mul sepeki ⁸ a ulëgél a Regëvúi l miledi ⁹ ra tuk ma kmlo kma ¹⁰ bertákl ë ma galegalíngel ¹¹ 195 ra di madál Ngaráier	34. My galid spirit will fulfill it. Why don’t you distract it Regëvúi’s spear that hit my breast? And I ate sand from the bottom of the sea and from the beach on Cape Ngëráir.
	ë ma madál Ngaráiër	35. And on Cape Ngëráir

¹ from tmu to go in (mgmu WALL.).

² a channel in Ngardmaū.

³ the young women of Ngardmaū.

⁴ from mangátakl to carry.

⁵ they would see how well behaved the girls are.

⁶ goeáol a water trench WALL.

⁷ from merégëd quick.

⁸ from osépëk to distract.

⁹ probably from oméld to boil down WALL.; tuk edge, fringe WALL., but also from metúker corner, bay.

⁸ mangang to eat.

⁹ more common is gológól.

¹⁰ mangang to eat.

¹¹ more common is gológól

ak medél ter ‘róp ¹ ra gis meng dírik mesúbed ² a dingák
dírik mākár ³ a mǎdák 200 ma sësë ra telík a direkák l sépëk ⁴.

ma tutél ⁵ a lild re ngak ra bital
gotáor ra madál Ngaráier mak medél ter ‘róp ra gis
l dírik kë mesúbed a dingák ldírik mākár a madák 205 ë rongesiá ⁶ l mángel dīl kië ra rīl lo gupǫgúp a klogád l këlë ngak
l ngálek deul, e mede ra lild

A man talks:

ngára i tiël l lángel rar Bútilei ⁷
ma Remetelíng ⁸ likó ⁹ re Ngivál
210 meng dímlö telkip a dmúiël ¹⁰

	ma ulitäg ra Ibaī a lengilaī ¹¹ lë gëmóit ¹²
	kom lilëngeliá ¹³ luldësebá ¹⁴ rengmíu ar Uelseī mem gëlngi ¹⁵ a Ugéla gëós a më kedáidai ¹⁶ a t kúl ¹⁷ a geidúdës
215	a mo meringël ra ráel
	kom liëngeliá lul dëbesá rengmiu ar

¹ medéi dead; merrop to bend, to lean WALL.

² in fact “to give a message” chant 197 line 7.

³ in fact “to watch”.

⁴ from suékëk to fly.

⁵ from t maut to hit (WALL. t ngmaut); when he was hit, he jumped high into the air and fell down on the sand next to the driftwood.

⁶ from orengës to hear.

⁷ the young girls of Ngivál.

⁸ probably the council of Ngarsngaī.

⁹ to the side of the person who is addressed, see chant 209, line 5 of Remóket.

¹⁰ the spot where the path arrives at the compound of a blai; the compound was full of people, when the body was brought.

¹¹ from ngu to take

¹² rom mengóit to throw.

¹³ from l mángel to weep.

¹⁴ from oldósep to satisfy.

¹² from mongól to carry on the shoulders.

¹³ common kedidái, (kididai WALL.)

¹⁴ from tuk , metúkër corner, see line 192.

¹⁵ from mongól to carry on the shoulders.

¹⁶ common kedidái, (kididai WALL.)

¹⁷ from tuk , metúkër corner, see line 192.

I fell dead into a puddle.

And my ear was still clear,

and still open my eye,

and little my breath has not yet flown.

36.

Hit by the spear I fell to the side of the driftwood on Cape Ngëráir and fell dead into the puddle, still clear was my ear,

still open my eye,

I heard a woman weep, who sat under trees on the beach,

maybe the siblings (have) pity with me,

the abandoned child, who died from the spear.

37.

What is this weeping of ar Bútilei and Ngaremeteling to Ngivál?

Only a small place was empty at the entrance to the compound,

and the doormats of a Ibaī were taken away and thrown away.

38.

You cried and satisfied your heart,

ar Uelseī;

now carry him, a Ugél, since the sun is high;

in the corners the pebbles

cause pain on the road.

39.

You have cried and satisfied your

Uelsai
mem gǝlŋgi a Ugél
a geós a mẽ kedáidai
*ě tir uě tẽ Ngal ‘l*¹*a melegědágěl*
*ra Ngél*²

220 *mailagá ra Golngabárd*³

a Ugél talks:

*a aorolá*⁴ mẽ dẽ geikú
*ma tungéd ra mogút*⁵ l Bai re Ngëribekú
a geimól blědigel a mei
*ma tal komúd godimél*⁶ l mẽ pēpedá 225 *meng dímlak ěá kungál*⁷ *di meltkú*⁸ re kau a Dalál a galei
a dí l kau l tá l meliô rě Gulsíang

Dalál a galíl speaks:

*ě mongo*⁹ mẽ kom sese mẽ m
lengeli a Ugél
ě kau ě mlě bagil
230 *ě ngák a di ongisóis*¹⁰

*kě ngoiô ter ‘rúm*¹¹ ma ilkém ma *galeblém*¹²
ě ngákoé gě geikú l mǎngěł *ma kmó olengau*¹³ r ardělál
*Gěoátáog*¹⁴

kom lilengeliá lul dese bá rengmíu ar Uelsei
135 *mēm gǝlŋgi a Ugél loietí*¹⁵ re
*Ngelsúm*¹⁶

heart, ar Uleseĩ;
carry a Ugél now,
since the sun is standing high;
those people from Ngeringal‘l lie in ambush at Ngél
and the one of Golngabáng.

40.
We had gone and approached and stepped into the old Bai of Ngarebokú;
a plate of taro came and a komúd-fish, its meat was poor,
and I could not eat,
I thought of you, Dalál a galíl,
only you cook in Gulsíang.

41.
Mongol come a little bit and cry about a Ugél,
you were his wife,
I was only subordinate.
42.
You took your spoon and your household goods and your load for the arm, and I, oh my, want to come to you to cry,
and I will be mocked by the women of Geoátáog.

43.
You wept and satisfied your heart,
ar Uelseĩ, carry Ugél now, place him down in Ngelsúm,

*me kól lul ‘lengúl*¹ ng mesél a doráel

*a tutél*² a lild re ngak ra madál
Ngarárd
ak medél ngalekél a mongol
*mě te mo kaiüëribeg*³ re ngak 240 arbíl a kmu ngěkóng
marbíl a kmung ng mei ng diák! ak di mo ra Ibaiě mo re
Gulsíang

His Mother Talks:

ak di mlě oltóir a lǎngel
*l mẽ vě leiēt*⁴ *a telegúl*⁵ 245 *ak uberědáng*⁶*, mo kom doidiúr*⁷ *ma kikó o kědak*⁸ ra bldókl
e mak lmǎngěł e vě leiēt a telegúl.

*ng korekau*⁹ a koiei ěá ngódeg
lagád a mlad *mě ke di mẽ kiě re kusík*¹⁰ 250 ma bo ker deli a lǎngel, ě kau a ngu, mar meséked rikl a ngu meng ě děkóng meténgěł
*ra úngil uěáol*¹¹

(Addition from another narrator.)

*a Ugélvüiěd*¹² *l ukar*¹³ e ilkólk 255 *e deběgeléd*¹⁴ *lak ked olmesim*¹⁵;
l di geimó melekói
*l melebáng dolsg*¹⁶
ě Ugéke meláe ra ngak mak remurt, ak maráel
e ngak meringěł gogík

¹ from ol ‘lengúl to take a rest.

² from tmaut to hit.

³ from or ‘ribeg to be greedy.

⁴ see loietí, vě or uě phon.

⁵ from melúgěl to carry on the head.

⁶ goberěvėd heavy.

⁷ from melidái to sail with someone WALL.

⁸ from olekėd to approach.

⁹ kíei to sit, to live.

¹⁰ “?poss. from kau you?”

¹¹ goeáol the well.

¹² also written uid (uüđ resin WALL.); in former times it was burnt and used to light; mekâr to watch, milkólk dark.

¹³ from kar medicine.

¹⁴ sweet dish, support.

¹⁵ from melmesim to shiver, to move.

¹⁶ dols or dolsg an old word for “nobody”.

and take a rest, when we are breathless during the hike.

44.
The spear hit me at the border of Ngarárd.

As I would die as the child of a bai-girl,
so they fight each other for me;
some say: take him!
and some say: give him up!
No! I only go to Ibai and Gulsíang

45.
I only followed the lament
and set down the load;
I am overloaded, you should make room,
that I get closer to the bundle with the dead body,
and I will cry and have set down the load.
46.
I wanted you to live, while other people should be dead, that you would sit with me,
and if I would begin to cry, you would too,
and the crowded ones would also do so,
as if water would flow down out of a good well

47.
a Ugél is a beacon that cures the darkness, our support, we do not shiver; he alone talks;
like him no one is coming any more.
a Ugél, you call me:
Shall I run, shall I go?
I have pain in my foot,

¹ tẽ they, in fact from Ngëringál‘l, a part of the district Ngarárd, north of Keklaũ; usually written Tengel‘l.

² mountain nearby Ngardmaũ.

³ also Golngauáol; another interpretation says instead of the names Ngel and Golngabáng (compare Goréör, bl 47 a. bl 36,) the words ngél and gol ngoál “here and there on one of the paths”.

⁴ gone; see above line 39.

⁵ old, of things.

⁶ from godóim meat.

⁷ from mangang to eat.

⁸ from meltak to think.

⁹ móngol bai-girl; it was a woman from Kiok.

¹⁰ in fact to stack on top of each other (mengisóis WALL.)

¹¹ from ter ‘rir the tortoise spoon.

¹² from mangábl to carry under the arm; everything she got as a present from him.

¹³ from melungũl to mock WALL.

¹⁴ the “four channel” alliance in the north of Ngaregolóng, where Kiok belongs to.

¹⁵ from omeliáng to set, to place.

¹⁶ a piece of savanna.

260 mak meditur a rolet babluádēs

and I do not know the way of heaven.

Chant 205. Chant about Ngirailangaláng.

A pretty man, a meringěl ‘lagád from Mangal‘láng and Hero, bekeu; chanted by his wife.

al du ¹ meng di gětík l diak ²
leból Ngirailangaláng Gomengabár rar telúl ³
e bē besēgei sel ngeklél ⁴
5 melōbó l Ngira bitál a gang ra klong a ilagá ⁵ ra Mengelekláng ⁶ a di mo deúl ⁷ a gúdel

tutél ⁸ a díu ma degērúk ⁹ ra Ker‘ro rukukúk 10 ng meremá góngolúngěl
l dio gai, l dío ngátěk ¹¹ ma lmangel l ngára aIdesei ¹²
dio mipi ¹³ ra ngakl
l kmu Kmekér ¹⁴ a mlo mangedi ra tútau 15 ma lólom a ngóio rengúl a masemei

mělǣgól ¹⁵ ngau ¹⁶ ra Bai ra Gokótól
mē loltápetap ¹⁶ ra ked l mē r Jóuremáng ¹⁷
ě kol di kmla ra Idesei
kol di kmla ra Ker‘róng 20 mē kulogoták ¹⁸ ra sau mē loungéd ¹⁹ re kamám
ě logólt a merengelěl ²⁰

¹ du to say, like tōkoí the speech, also cause.

² from dui title.

³ his younger brother, who should not have the title at the death of the pretty man.

⁴ from ngákl name.

⁵ they.

⁶ blai of Ngirailangaláng

⁷ space in-between, see the end of Gurdmaū’s kesekés (chant 194) “to lie between bushels of grass, degenerate”.

⁸ from tmaut to hit, diu the shout.

⁹ from degór to stand.

¹⁰ The shrub at the entrance to the landing place Gokótól on the west coast, where the fight took place, in which he died.

¹¹ diosisiu “similar”, gai pounder; like the blows of a pounder? ngátěk meaning?

¹² a taro patch.

¹³ omipīs to call somebody.

¹⁴ The leader (kamángěl, see story 206, line 2) the Mangal‘lang-fighter.

¹⁵ from melúgěl or mongol to carry.

¹⁶ from oltáb to let rest WALL.

¹⁷ bay in Mangal‘láng.

¹⁸ ologoták to come out of hiding.

¹⁹ from ongér to answer?

²⁰ from meringěl pain.

1.
The reason, I do not want, that my title Ngirailangaláng goes to Gomengabár rar telúl, they will call his name,
it should be Ngira . . . ,
the ones from Mengelekláng will only be in the grass!
2.
His war-scream and my standing in Ker‘róng ¹⁰ in the morning, then came stretchers,
one after the other,
and weeping was in a Idesei;
they call the name
and say, Kmekér led them to the fight in the morning, and 6 (spears) have taken the heart of the sweetheart.

3.
They carried you from the bai in Gokótól with many rest periods from the grassland to Jórmáng;
if I only were in a Idesei,
if I only were in Ker‘róng, and I showed myself to the lover
he greeted us
and showed his injury.

sel tal makamád ě ke remúrt ¹
l mo ra Idó re Ngrīl 25 e mē ra Ulogotóng ², meringēlagáng mak sal ³ mesekau ⁴
ě ng vea lekóte mengilt re kau ra réng
kol ě gudákl ⁵ a bekl klúped ma re Ngaraulkél ⁶ a manggēgēlil ⁷ a upetem ⁸.

30 a gaisém, ě meringěl a gang,
a le mē lobú ra ungiail ⁹ kúkuk
a le mē kmēngirs ¹⁰ i ngara despasá
ě melátk ra delék l direkák mē lebungí ¹¹
ma kmegēláol ¹² ě ki di l mángel
35 l mo imül ra Mangal‘lakl ě ma kdēgeró ¹³ ra ked ra Sarói ¹⁴
ě mekíkngitē ¹⁵ e rengúk
a kisa ¹⁶ ugúl a galángěl ra rois e Gelókl,
a songē ¹⁷, iél did de milar i ěungél ¹⁸ 40 mak melép ra mo plegél ¹⁹
a másēmei

sel tal makamád ě ki pis l di ngára ked
ě ngi gobungál ²⁰ mē liaiél
Ngarabau

¹ merúrt to run WALL.

² Idong and Ulogótong are the channels of Ngrīl

³ = kmál very.

⁴ omés to see.

⁵ from ologoud to look everywhere for someone.

⁶ club from Galáp.

⁷ from mangalil to divine

⁸ bviously from ruēpet to fall down WALL.

⁹ ungiáng healthy WALL.

¹⁰ mengirs to marry to another place.

¹¹ rom obu to open oneself WALL., or omu to break. On the occasion of the 1. pregnancy, the family of the husband gives a payment to the woman during the feast buldīl “the breaking of the belly”. Here the female singer laments, that she has not yet been paid.

¹² gēláol fearsome. She loves him and was fearful that he would notice it and therefore, would not pay.

¹³ from degór to stand.

¹⁴ at the entrance to Ngabiül.

¹⁵ mekngit miserable, bad.

¹⁶ mengisem a fish, which buries the head in the mud, to look for fish WALL. She looked underneath the treetop, where she had met her loved one.

¹⁷ from sau treasure.

¹⁸ gēungél underneath.

¹⁹ The tree that is protruding from the house for pigeon shooting.

²⁰ from obu to open oneself, to tumble outside.

4.
During that one fight you ran to Idong in Ngrīl and came to Ulogotóng, pretty man,
and when I saw you correctly,
then it was, as if they had rubbed
you with curcuma yellow;
they search every channel,
and Ngaraulkél makes a divination,
in order to ask you.
5.
Your news, oh pretty man,
when they spread in the early morning,
I was married on the east side.
I thought of my belly, that is not yet broken,
and I was afraid, but still I was weeping
over to Mangal‘láng,
and when I stood on the grassland Saroi,
I was very miserable in my heart;
I look down at the galángel-tree trunk on the hill Gelókl, sweetheart, we were always underneath, and I cut, what should be the pigeon ladder of the beloved.
6.
At that one fight, we were visitors on the grassland, when the spears of Ngarabau came flying,

	l di bitál ěm mo rě	the entire side attacked
	Ngirailangaláng	Ngirailangaláng,
	ma kmu: bikél, ěá mokokau ¹	and I said: boy be careful,
	mě móiu ² , mobbed a lidél	side step, catch the spear of
	Ngirasiláng	Ngirasiláng,
	me lobĕpĭp ³ ar Galăgáp ⁴ l mo	the Galagáp-people escape to
	ra Idép	a Idép
	ě goiti ⁵ a Ker‘rong	and leave behind Ker‘rong,
50	a Ker‘ro lúĕbak	Ker‘rong the rubak,
	a mlo galdĭl gongésep	who became the prey of the sweetheart.

Story 206. The Mongol Mangitíp.

log.: bai 60 III^a (KUB. VIII pl. 44²), bai 62 VII^b, bai 63 I, bai 67 V^a illustr. d.-pl. 26^d, bai 68 s. a. VI, bai 76 VII^b, bai 83 VIII, bai 94 IV^a, bai 95 V^b, bi 117 w. phot., bai 120 VII^b illustr. aqu. 31^d, bai 125 V^b, bai 129 VI^b. bai 152 I^b.

A woman called Mangitíp was a bai-girl in a Imelĭk, in Gámliangĕl. She lived in Bai Kl‘lang, up in a Lmüt. Melágĕlpelú, rubak II of Gamliangĕl, was her companion in the bai, but she did not love him, because she was close to someone else, to Ngiradéngĕs. One day, of her brothers and one of her sisters came by canoe from Pelíliou to bring her back, as she had served her time. Therefore, she said to her secret lover he should give her a klsuk-piece of money. He, however, had nothing. Hearing this, Melágĕlpelú tied his piece of money, which he wanted to give her, on the tip of his spear. With the following words he held it in front of her nose: Look this was supposed to yours. But let your lover give it to you! —Then Mangitíp wept, because now she had nothing and had come in vain as mongol to a Imelĭk.

Chant 206. About Mangitíp,

also called Dililong from Gámliangĕl.

	1.	Dililong is happy about her behavior,
	a Dĭlio melúsog ra tekingél ⁶	the sweetheart of the Bai does not know how to betray,
	a kled l Bai ě metúl umángĕl ⁷	and stays away from the chiefs of
	e mangeróid rengí ra rúbak ra	Túlau. ⁸ .
	Túlau ⁸ .
	er‘ra, meng mla ra bekesél ⁹	Friend it was one step
5	gogím ra ráel	of your foot on the path;
	ma m koked ěngĕvável ¹⁰	if we wanted to go deep sea fishing,
	ě ke metul lóungĕvável ¹¹	you would not know anything about deep sea-fishing
	me kobangel ¹² ra gadéng	and would be bitten by a shark
	l melégĕt ¹³ uriúr	and would tie behind.

¹ mokokák I slowly, búik boy.

² oliu to avoid, oméd to catch with the hand.

³ obépĭp to run away

⁴ the young people of Ngabiúl; a Idép a blai there.

⁵ mengóit to throw away. Ker‘róng, a man from Ngabiul, has been speared by Ngirailangaláng.

⁶ tōkói speech, behavior.

⁷ omángel to make a fool of someone (WALL.) see chant 205, line 14; metul ignorant.

⁸ the Bai of the chiefs in Gámliangel.

⁹ omákĕs to stride.

¹⁰ oungōvável deep sea fishing, especially catching sharks.

¹¹ ngoáol open sea

¹² omángg to bite.

¹³ from merénged? to tie; uriúl in the back, instead of in front the head.

	2.	Dililong is happy about her behavior,
10	a Dĭlio melúsog ra tekingél	the sweetheart of the bai, does not know how to betray,
	a kled l Bai ě metúl umángel	and stays away from the chiefs of Túlau,
	ě mangeróid rengi ra rúbak ra Túlau	she does not think of Melágĕlpelú,
	ě diak lĕkó Melágĕlpelú ¹	and Ngiraĭdeĭ, the galid spirit of Ngarangás.
	mě Ngiraĭdeĭ a gĕdúl Ngarengás	Mongol, you hate us,
15	ě móngo, ě kaŭ kouketúi	you are dubious.
	ke melébĕk ²

	Mangitíp ma kau vĕ rudá ³
	rĕngúm
	ng torekliá ⁴ ra rbékl meringĕl
	lagád
	ě di kamlúk ⁵ mě kúlag ⁶ re kaŭ
20	mě musál ⁷ tal mesólk lĕgád ra
	peluál
	mě berkedau ⁸ re ngí.
	ma dĕsá ěars l mě melúiel ra btil ra
	rael
	e te ngeúl gorédem

	Mangitíp mekid armóngol
25	go ketíd ra rúbak, lo ketíd lo
	rarmaraŭ, ketíd rarmeaŭ
	ng uá debégĕl tekingél a sau
	a dolokói me dólag re kau
	e ngi te ke di déngĕrengĕr

Melágĕlpelú to Mangitíp:

30	koldí bedúl ra Korángĕd	I wish I would be the head of Korángĕd
	ě k ngĕré l ⁹ ku klebekól	and the mouth of the men’s club,
	mak du gĕlē ¹⁰ mĕlēkóng	so that, when I am talking now,
	mě le bol tutu ra rengmiu	it would enter your hearts;
	l tak ¹¹ rĕ góngolungĕl	step on the stretcher,
35	ma re galeás ¹² a le mei	and when the food comes,

¹ rubak II of Gámliangel, also called Ngarengás, nr. I of the village section Ikngas, where Bai Túlau is situated. He was her bai-companion.

² melebedébĕk to think; she thinks, she does not receive any money, with which bai-girls are paid.

³ ráud changing, deceptive.

⁴ matarákl to disperse.

⁵ l múk, to be quiet see chant 207, line 21.

⁶ also medolág from mel’lag to teach, to instruct.

⁷ from omés to see.

⁸ omrékĕd to glue, berékĕd gluey, this means she should look for a good man and marry him.

⁹ poss. from ngor mouth, see story 188a, p. 205.

¹⁰ geilagáng now, today.

¹¹ tmak to step on

¹² the food that is brought to the woman by her people.

ě dēbsá ¹ mongól	we give it to the bai-girl,
mě di lēgalēbāngēl ²	so that it is lying in front of her.
a ké l mongól	You, mongol,
m vué s ³ aikē longerūl ⁴ a lápek.	look at it, this is the reason of your stupidity!

Story 207. Dir‘rungūlbai’s ⁵ Revenge For Her Brother On Ngirangāmeúsōg and Malsól.

(Several chants exist about both the last ones) log.: bai 74 I.

Ngirangāmeúsōg was the head of the men’s club Ngaratatiróu, which lived in bai a Dngöróngěr ⁶ in Goréōr. The rubak from a Imeúngs in Ngaram lungúi sent him the message, he should come with his people to kill the brother of Dir‘rungūlbai in Ngarekeāi, who had come to thatch the roof of the canoehouse in Galsegei. This man had become too rich and powerful for them, so that they feared the predominance of a Imelīk. However, people from a Imeúngs told him they had heard, that the Goréōr-people were out to kill him, consequently they offered to accompany him back to a Imelīk. He accepted. However, when they reached Cape Madálabai ⁷, came to the island Golterúkl, the men of the Ngaratatiróu-alliance who had been hidden behind this island, attacked. Together with the people from a Imeúngs, they killed the powerful and feared man. This enraged his sister Dir‘rungūlbai and she sought revenge. She sent a messenger to Ngirangāmeúsōg and offered him her hand. He loved the woman and therefore, accepted the offer. She came to him into his blai Ngāmeúsōg in Ngarekobasáng and lived now with him. However, secretly she concentrated on a way how to kill him.

One day, she told him: I heard a Ibēdul wants to kill you, because you are too powerful; come we want to move to another place. — He agreed and the punted in a canoe to the east. When they went underneath the Delebégēl-bridge of Ngarekamāis’ stonewall, Ngirangāmesúōg asked: Where do you want to go? to a Imelīk? — She replied: This is much too close. Here they would kill you. We want to go to Ngardmau. — When they reached Pkurengél, they saw a tamaitolók mudskipper fish ⁸ sitting on the outrigger. He was sad to see something of Goréōr and, because this is what he wanted the canoe sailed to Ngarekamāis to deposit the fish. When they had arrived there, he said to the fish: You stay here, I no longer belong to your relatives, you stay here! — Then the canoe finally sailed to Ngardmau.

Here, high chief Beóug welcomed the arrivals and brought them to the village, where they lived in blai Ngrugéróng ⁹. One day, the woman Dir‘rungūlbai said to Beóug: Send a message to a Rāklāi to send some people to kill Ngirangameúsog. — Then came twice people from Melekéiok, but they did not dare to come close to the strong man. This one realized by and by all these attacks and came to terms with his fate. When Beóug had sent the first time a message to Melekéiok, Ngirangameúsog had already received an urongókl-sign. One day, when he was sitting and doing his manual work, a mongol-girl brought a bersóiōg-snake and dropped it on his hand. Then he took his adze and cut the snake in pieces. So they saw how strong he was.

One day, he dozed in Gurdmau’s bai during daytime. Beóug said to a mongol, she should take a burning twig of a wild debegēl-lime and place the glowing embers into his hand. When this was done, he went home to his wife

¹ ngu to take.

² galēbāngēl in front (WALL. with the face turned to someone).

³ order: look at.

⁴ supposedly from ugúil the reason, but probably from ongér to answer. She is stupid that she throws away the food to other people, because she does not know what to do with it.

⁵ probably the 7. Galutam gogīl, whose brother Gasóu Ngiramel‘lóng is mentioned in Ngk. At. 2 Gen. III.

⁶ he seems to have also lived in Baillkiēu, see story 161.

⁷ Cape Gomo (go) lúgēl, map 3..

⁸ The mudskipper Periophthalmus.

⁹ see the grotto Ngaduogéróng that is also called Ngirangameúsog.

in the evening and said: If you want to kill me, why don’t you say so? I will sit down and die on my own, if you do not dare to do it.

— The following morning the Melekéiok-people came for the third time. At the break of dawn they barged into his house; he, however, stayed in the small ulangáng-house. He opened the door, stepped outside and threw all the spears, he had ready at hand at them and each one hit. A spear, however, pierced the palm of his hand . Then he went back to his chamber to die there. So they speared him inside, dragged him then outside, and cut off his head, which they took with them to Melekéiok. Dir‘rungūlbai followed and married the high chief a Rāklāi. She said: The head of Ngira ngameúsog shall be my water pot.

— Thereupon, they waited until the meat had fallen off and he prepared the skullcap to hang it up. One day, she said to a Rāklāi, she wanted to have a so-called delepēsákl, leg-tattoo. When her wish was fulfilled and everything had healed, she reclined one evening on her bed with her back to a Rāklāi. After some time, when she had remained in this position, he asked her: Do you want even more, as you always turn your back on me? — Then she replied: a Rāklāi, when the men’s club Ngaragoududí in a Imeúngs has been completely destroyed, then I will be satisfied.

— Thus, a Rāklāi invited Gáldēbegēl to come for a klegadāol-visit to Melekéiok. The club followed this invitation and all its members came; only Ngiramangerengi from blai IV Sipóng was missing. He was good looking, strong, and was staying on Pelíliou. People were waiting many days for him. When he finally returned to a Imeúngs, he was told his club was in Melekéiok waiting for him. People also informed him about the imminent danger and his family advised him not to go there. He, however, did not want that his friends had to face the danger alone. He ate dinner, made his curcuma-yellow, and prepared his spears. Then he left the same night for Melekéiok. In the early morning he reached the head of the path a Ngaraibeságēl. He painted himself yellow and went to the nearby bai. News about this raced like fire through the settlement. At once, a Rāklāi sent a messenger to Merongór in Ngival with the following command: The blood of a Imeúngs is not allowed to drop on the ground of Melekéiok ¹. Prepare a big feast of blsík ², we come and want to kill them in Ngivál.

Everything was carried out accordingly. All were killed except Ngiramangerengi, whom Merongór hid on the reákl-rack upstairs in the house. This one then sent the message: Everyone is dead, except Ngira mangerengi, who escaped. — Thereupon Dir‘rungūlbai got angry and said: I have to have Ngira mangerengi as the topmost on my galdáēl-heap ³! Rubak a Rāklāi sent back the command to try everything to get him. Ngiramangerengi heard the message. Although they tried to hinder him, he climbed down and said: What shall I do here all alone now that my friends are dead? In the same moment he rushed outside and was speared. Now Dir‘rungūlbai was satisfied. All the dead soldiers were buried in Ngivál.

When a Rāklāi asked Dir‘rungūlbai, what else she wanted, she said: I only wish to have tattoos on the palms of my hands and on the soles of my feet ⁴.

¹ because both are children of Milad (see story 19).

² taro dumplings with coconut oil.

³ heaped taro for a feast.

⁴ This tattoo is called golútūm gógīl, One day, she sent a message to her family in Imelīk asking for their assistance in weeding and in the taro patch. Those, who were sent to help, drifted with their canoe in a storm and, thus, arrived in Yap. In this manner the title Rungūlbai got there.

— At once the dots were executed. When everything had healed and the pair had gone to bed in the evening, the woman embraced her husband with her legs, while her body was lying apart. The following morning a Rāklaṯ asked her: Dir‘rungūlbai, what is the reason for your behavior? — She replied: a Rāklaṯ, I want to feel something from Goréör and want Malsol ¹ killed.

—So the rubak got ready for the fight. The canoes sailed south around Babldáob. However, when they arrived at the east side of the Toágěl mid, they became afraid and did not dare to get closer to Goréör. They sailed north along the west coast of Babldáob, and whenever they arrived at some settlements, they gave pieces of money to the galid spirit, so that they would help them to catch Malsól. When they arrived at Cape Pkurengél, Bagáp from Nggësár, a brave man, was there. He stood on the headland and said: One part should stay outside sailing north, the other one should come into the mangroves. — In this manner, it was carried out. Those sailing outside met Malsól, who was fishing at night. They asked him: Who is there?— He answered: I, Malsól! Who are you?— Then the Melekéiok-people said: No! ² We want to sail up the coast. —Suddenly they had again become scared. When they met the others again, Bagáp said: Have you not seen a canoe out there?

— They replied: Yes, we saw Malsól.— Then he asked again: Very well, was not he the one you wanted? Why didn’t you kill him? — So they returned looking for Malsól, and when they met him again, they attacked him and fought him a long time. Only the following morning, after many from Ngatělngál had been wounded and were killed, one of them hit him with an ulóiög-spear ³ in the hand. Since it was the right hand that had been hit, Malsól could no longer throw any spears. He sat down. Now Bagáp jumped on his canoe to kill him. Malsól, though, grabbed him with his left hand and held him under water. Then the others rushed after him and threw Malsól over board and they started to wrestle in the water all the way down to the bottom of the sea. Only when Bagáp, who was the lowest, managed to slit open Malsól’s belly with a protog ⁴-knife, this one died. They took the body on board of the canoe and brought it to Galěguí, where they placed it at the rubak-bai Geisáu and in their rage crushed it with stones. They used so many stones, that a heap was formed that today is still considered to be Malsól’s grave. Therefore in times of war between a Imelík and Ngatělngál, Galěguí always remained nonattached. When the messengers brought the news about this event to Melekéiok, Dir‘rungūlbai was satisfied and now everything remained calm.

Chant 207. Dir‘rungūlbai To Ngiramangerengeĭ.
	1.
kungól ra Bungaruau ⁵	When I was mongol in Bungaruau,
ě Ngira mangerengeĭ gomělau ⁶	Ngira mangerengeĭ sounded me
meng mě kmu ⁷	out and entered
l bad ra Bai l mogeiul a bar	and slept in the Bai and put his head on a roll of mats.
ě tuóběd ma kmu:	When he went outside, I said:
5 komogúr?	Where do you want to go?
ki mo ra Meléngěl l ngarengí a	We go to Meléngel, there is water,
ralm	with the burbling of water
ě luěá děbád l ngálek	we sleep there like children,
a mangesekés rekid goeól ra	it cradles us like the well of

¹ belongs to blai IV Tegeki in Goréör and had helped to kill her brother; see Malsól in story 161 about a Guóděl.

² the general negative reply to an exact question is genuinely South Pacific like; on Samoa the natives also answer similar questions leaṯ= no.

³ the one with the sling of the spear

⁴ club studded with shark-teeth

⁵ bai in a Imeŭngs, just as Meléngel, where a water pipeline was situated high above the channel.

⁶ omělaṯ to fish for information.

⁷ kmul inside.

Meléngěl l mě meteltilěg

- 10 kungól ra Bungaruau
ě Ngira mangerengeĭ gomělau mě kmu
l bad ra Bai l mogeiul a bar
ě tuóběd ma kmu:
ki mo ra Ibut
- 15 ě ngi goderegelěl ¹ a klsau gěgeikul
l mo klngěrékl ma kmo:
komogúr?
ki mogú ra a Itúngelblaia songě!
ma ked e katekói.

- 20 kerdi rek ³ l mad argád
gomlilúk ⁴ ma tebló ⁵ doubúg ěgělagá k bagim ma kubá ⁶ měaṯ ⁷ l bar
ma k mangěúng ⁸ rekau ra télia ra Mangerengeĭ
ngak ma dělěmám a mlo oldelómt
a búiěl

Chant 208 Between Godíu re ngós And His Female Lover.

- L.
- 1 Godíu re ngó ⁹ kusĭk re kau
bekl terúkěł deruětěg ¹⁰ ra Bai ra Galdéng
ma k metórd u mākemád
ě kedmu re ngak l kmu: songék iá
- 5 ngak a mlo melbói ra gamelék ¹¹ ra díděl dálem ¹² ěl kebiul a Segemlóng
mě kelé ketomeliá ¹³ sel kebiul a Segemlóng

¹ goderúgěl the messenger

² because he does not find him.

³= rekid? we.

⁴ lmúk to be silent, see chant 206, line 19.

⁵ instead of teblóng “two” for people usually těrung is used; oubúg to marry.

⁶ akubáng I have it.

⁷ meaṯ supposedly means the same as del’lul “roasted taro”; but meaṯ also means “sacred”.

⁸ The 2 mourning women sit at the middle door, on both sides of the corpse, see Vol. 3, illustr. 221 and 227.

⁹ oldíu to sneeze, thus, “a sneezer to the east”, see story 80 Mad ra klai, where he appears as Sesilil, the son of Gobakremegú and marries to a Imül. If the mentioned sweetheart is his wife, is not known.

¹⁰ derětěg the long side of the beams on the long side of the bai. The bai in Ngardórog nearby Ngarsúl.

¹¹ gamágěl the small betel nut chew; melbói picking the betel leaves.

¹² dálem a short man or tree, kebiúi the betel creeper. Rub. IV of Ngarsúl.

¹³ metāmál to spoil.

Meléngel, the falling water.

- 2.
- When I was mongol in Bungaruau, then Ngira mangerengeĭ sounded me out and entered and slept in the Bai and put his head on a roll of mats.
When he went outside, he said:
We go to Ibut blai.
But the lover’s messenger comes soon
and is angry ² and I say:
Where do you want to go?
We go to a Itúngelblai, sweetheart, and want to talk with each other.
- 3.
- Only we die, the human beings.
When you are silent, then the two of us will marry
Now I am your wife and have the sacred mat with me,
and I mourn you on one side of Mangerengeĭ,
I and our mother, the entire length of the moon.

- She;
- Godíu re ngos, I search for you each corner, each beam in Bai ra Galdéng
and I am angry and attack you yet, you told me and say: My dear,
I just want to break a betel-leaf only from the small betel
creeper of S.,
however, maybe you spoil the creeper of S.

a murs a gas re gotengél	the stripes of sooth on his cheek
ē torákl ¹ a klism ra Imëóng	he outrivals the faces of a Imëóng.
Chant 214. Bagësilél a Ngirangaruángël Goréör.
telekûl ² gogim ē ngi re Ngaruáng	The tattoos on your leg, Ngira ngaruángël,
logúkl ra Dmesóngöþ ³ e ⁴	is a picture of Dmesóngep
garāmám	and our sweetheart,
aki bo ra Iebóng	when we go to a Iebúkûl.

Chant 215. The Magic Tree Bars ra kesâu,⁵ And Sagageiegáng, the Fullfiller of Magic.
log.: bai 4 VIII, bai 13 I, bai 22 w a. III^a, bai 34 VI^a, bai 48 s. pl. II^d, bai 51 VIII illustr. d.-pl. 15^f, bai 56 VIII illustr. d.-pl. 26^e, bai 83 II^b, bai 92 e, bai 95’w, bai 99 VI^b, bai 104 V^a, bai 111 I, bai 131 II^b, bai 142 VII^b.
The bersóiög-boa snake on Peliliou had two sons, Kulúkl ketâu ⁶ and Sagageiegáng ⁷ and two daughters, Dil edegú ⁸ and Dagëšäg the frog. The mother lived with her children in the sacred tree Bars ra kesâu that had come with his inhabitants in a cloud (iápës) from heaven. This gave Ngariáp its name. The oldest one, Kulukl ketâu, lived close by at the channel Ngaramongós, where he had a gongriúr-fish pond. He knew a magic spell, a gólei, called Gatariáp ⁹. With its help he forced the fish to come to the surface and to let them be caught, so that he could capture them and place them into his pond. However, Sagageiegáng knew the Gomókět ¹⁰ magic, with which he could awake dead people and the magic Gongâu s with which he could kill human beings. He stood in the middle of the tree, on the branches of one side were women, on the other side men. First he made the women sing the Gongaus against the men, so that they died. Then he made them sing the Gomókět, so that they returned to life, then he told the men to do the same. In this manner he showed the power of his gólei. Therefore, when singing a magic chant, people always shout Sagageiegáng ma ke bedógël, “Sagageiegáng fulfill it”.

	The spell was like this:	The Magic Gomókět.
	ak rekós bedagalá ¹¹ ra ngerém, a	I fulfill your command, Sagageiegáng, you gave
	Sagageiegál	me this fulfillment to explain the magic,
	l meskók tial bedógël lo meketél a golei	and I place it in the branch of the dup-tree
	mak malagá tial sēsibog l dúp ¹²	to clear the magic, I took it (the branch),
	lo meketél a gólei l k ngilu	and I only want to hurry
5	ma k dirur táng ma ngesegék ra	my climb up the trunk of the Bars
	ugúl a bars ra kesâu	ra kesâu.
	ngarengí a Sagageiegáng ma	there is Sagageiegáng and

¹ from mer ‘rákl to disperse.

² poss. from telekâu the one sided tattoos on the leg

³ Goréör’s head of the trail leading east, where probably stood a bai.

⁴ gárašm, garm, animal, sweetheart.

⁵ bars a beautiful tree, probably a kind of Clerodendron, kesâu indicated the swooshing noise, because a man who talks obligingly is called ngërikesâu.

⁶ the back of the ketâu-fish;

⁷ name of the lizard galaiegáng; see story 17a about Tipëtipakmiëg

⁸ see Vol. 3, story 17a

⁹ from gamát to praise, to laud; the raising of the fish obviously happened because of the dúp-poison that is mentioned in the Gomóked-magic. Ngariáp

¹⁰ from omókět to clear, to clean; doing so he held a sis-twig in his hands; gomókět (poss. gomoketél) means also the head and comb decoration, obviously as gólei .

¹¹ “fulfillment”; ak bedagaláng I have fulfilled, see p. 48; WALL. bedóchel “effective”. KUB. VI p. 37 mentions bodókol Kalid a priest, who is obsessed by a galid spirit.

¹² dup obviously Derris Uliginosa, known for its fish poison

Diledëgú malál ‘l ¹ gomókět	Dilëdëgú, to sing Gomókět,
ma k di ngilásäg ² ē kmo	and I only climb up and speak:
Diledegó tiangaráng tia gomókět	Dilëdëgú, what is it this Gomókět?
më di lo bekëbekëtánga bedengék ³	and free (of magic) is my body,
10 ngak ma ngar ‘rág lagád	I and other people
rë gëlagál lë gëós	on this day!
ē Sagageiegáng ma ke bedógël.	Sagageiegáng fulfill it!

Keluklketaû was always trying to restrain his brother Sagageiegáng to use the malevolent Gongauſ-magic, because he did not intend anything bad. Since he did not succeed and when all his talk did not help, he pronounced the counter-magic, which goes like this:

Gólei of Kélúklketaû.
ak di bad l Ngarmonós, ⁴	I only sleep in Ngramongós,
m kisá ra ungitusél l kebeset ⁵	and got up in a well divided night,
15 e malál ‘l mo ra rebëk l galid	and began to sing against every Galid spirit
ngara bars ra kesâu l malál gólei	in Bars ra kesau, the magic sings.
e ngak a mangaliaû melépdep ⁶	I anoint you, prepare a drink for you
e melemkél ⁷ a del ‘lul	and clean roasted taro for you;
me melekói di lë malát	when (someone against me) talks, he shall break,
20 ma di mom mangardákl ⁸ a sesëi	and when (someone) talks a bit of (magic)
ë mo mogút a ngerél	his mouth shall rot.

When Kélúklketaû succeeded, and his time came to return to heaven, he decided to move first around Pelau in order to see the wealthy houses. He moved up the west coast and returned moving down the in the east. In Melekéiok he won the favor of high chief a Raklaĩ, who gave him his daughter as his wife. In fact he was just organizing a gongéd-feast and he suspected that Kélúklketaû was rich. When the girl was not willing, her father forced her. At night, the couple slept in the shrine, the following morning the newly wed bridegroom looked beautiful and marvelous. The girl was pleasantly surprised and told her father so, but when this one came to have a look at Kélúklketaû, he was again ugly. He stayed until new moon. Then a Raklaĩ said: My feast will be over at the next full moon, and then we have to pay everything. — Very well, said Kélúklketaû, then I have to sail to Peliliou to look for money, so that on the following full moon the tiakl-payday can take place. — The chief thought he would have enough time and should sail there with his wife. The family a Údës got the provisions ready for the trip. Soon afterwards a lot of canoes sailed south and entered the channel of Ngaramongós. There stood a tall old guriúr-mangrove tree that was hollow inside. Kélúklketaû beat on it, and at once there was loud thunder. Those in Ngariáp heard it and came immediately with hot water to bathe, with food and drinks as a welcome.

Both of them took a bath and ate then, then they came to Bars ra kesâu in order to sleep in the local sop-house. When the first wife of Kélúklketaû saw the new one, she was rather angry, but he placated her, saying the daughter of a Raklaĩ was very aristocratic and they only had come for business.

¹ WALL. melall to sing.

² ngmásašg to climb.

³ bedengék my body (WALL. “my appearance”); sils, gáios the sun, geilagáng today.

⁴ see map Vol. 2.

⁵ this means midnight. (WALL. midday ungí tachelél a sils, midnight metudá klebeséi.)

⁶ He wants to help his brother; melép to cut, delepdép scraped coconut; here it indicates a drink of the gods, half a young broken coconut is scraped and the scrapes are mixed with the water of the fruit.

⁷ malámk to scrape taro outside; del ‘lul

⁸ mangardákl to mention; when someone says a malevolent magic spell, he shall become lazy.

After five days Kəlúklketaŭ received from his mother the famous piece of money dālál a udóud “the mother of money”, also called Klamiókl that was classified as the mother of Bersóioǵ snake. After the treasure was stored in a basket, both of them left again. On the way a Rāklaŭ’s daughter sewed a big and spacious bag, in which the piece of money was placed. At once, it started whistling and all its children came flying through the air, so that the bag was filled with money. In Melekéiok Kəlúklketaŭ paid everything with it and lived with his wife in the small ulangáng-house. One day, he heard her say: I love this man, he is divine, but he smells of snakes ¹.

— This angered him. He gave the rest of the money to a Rāklaŭ, took Klamiókl, and returned to Pelíliou, where he told everything to his mother. She and her children then put fire to the sop-houses, and in the smoke returned back to heaven. This was also when Bars ra kesau̇ perished.

Chant 216. gol’lak Love Magic.

The young shoots of the Turkish-Saddle-Bean creepers kótep are scraped clean and the scraping is placed in a coconut leaf sheath, sprinkled with oil, and then the bundle is stored. When the magic is needed, then you press some oil out and brush it on an areca nut, or someone else brushes the skin of the person whose love should be won. He then can no longer sit still and will come. While doing so the following magic is said:

ke rekós bedagalá ra ngerém e Rimél meskok tial bedógēl ² lol’lak mak m lagá kur tial l gamelél ³ ngar’rag l dil re gēlagá lē gaeós 5 ē Sagageiegáng ⁴ mē ke bēdóg ⁷ ē ke gamelék l kótep mē ke ngara tik ⁵
ē olagaŭ ra rengúl ngar’rag l dil mē dil tekngē uel’lék ⁶ mekěálemesúg ⁷
mekěá lema ngai
10 ng kuk re kemó oleúpek?
a Sagageiegá me ke bedógēl.

*ngeréngel búog
golēgeb* ⁸
kerekós bedagalá ra ngerém e Selbol meskók tial bedógel l ngēréngel buog mak m lagá re ngi lol’lak 15 l gamelél ngar’ra gl dil ra gēlagá l geos ē Sagageiegá mē ke bedógel!

1. kótep
You fulfill your command, Rimirēg, make, that my love magic will work,
and now I am putting down the small chew
for any woman today.
Sagageiegáng, you fulfill,
you, my kotep small chew in my basket,
make the heart of that woman, attentive,
so that she follows me and will no longer be removed,
and will no more be taken away.
Will she again run away?
Sagageiegáng fulfill it.
2.
The Small Betel Nut.
Medicine.
You fulfill your mouth, Selbógeŭ, give me this fulfillment, little betel nut, and I place for her the love magic
the small chew, for any woman today.
Sagageiegáng fulfill it!

¹ compare story 30a illustr. d.-pl. 15f right.
² in fact “this fulfillment”, see chant 215; the inventor of the magic is called Rimireg, story 38.
³ from gamágēl small chew.
⁴ galíd see above chant 215.
⁵ from tet basket worn on the arm.
⁶ mak uriúl to follow; instead of uriúl in the back, here ul’lek my back, though ulkek is common; WALL. ullek poss. of uriúl, behind me).
⁷ mesúg to lift, to peel.
⁸ from melégeb to lift up (medicine to induce an abortion WALL.)

ke ul l kedēpikl iaŭs e ke ngeréngel búog?
ke tmu ra gongedēgógol’lél ¹
l tikeví ² a btir ³ a uláol 20 ma lēkea lekó dalál ma rugadál ⁴ e l meremál takul’lék ⁵
ng kuk re kemó oleúpek?
ē Sagageiegáng me ke bedógēl!
uaririririri!

Do you have the thick lips of the iaus- Convict tang fish or the small betel nut?
they go into her mouth
they lift their buttocks from the floor, so that she does not think of her mother and her siblings.
Come, follow me!
Is she going to run away again?
Sagageiegáng fulfill it!
uaririririri! (see story 125).

Chant 217. mora ngerikesau̇.

In Order To Become a Popular Person (see chant 215).

For instance, when a young man returns to the club, where he is disliked. With the help of the magic he will be pleasing and popular.

ke rekós bedagalá ra ngerém ē Dingelio
*l meskók tial bedógēl l mora ngerikesau̇
mak m lagá kur tiál l gemelék
l mora ngerikesau̇ ra gēlagá lēgēós
ē Sagageiegángme ke bedógēl,
ak mo okepekepesi* ⁶, a kul a tik ⁷
5 ē mo medí ⁸ a galevelék ⁹ mak remúrt lokiú ¹⁰ *ióu ráel
l mong másag ra ngúl a geregeróir Uángēl
ak bo te mesekēd re ngí a rubak má rsagalik ma rgalidēgád* 10 ēo ker re ngak l kmu :
— kau keměrál ¹¹ sosoál ¹² a Dingeliús
ē goberdíl a rengúl?
*ma kmu : ng! ak marál
ditál sosoál, ē goberdíl a rengúl.*
15 mak di mogú okepekepesi a kul a tik

ē mo medí a galēvelék mak remúrt lokiú ióu ráel

You fulfill your command, Dingeliús, give me this fulfillment, to become popular,
and now I place this small chew,
in order to become popular today.
Sagageiegáng, you fulfill it,
I go with the long handle, the handle of my basket,
I catch my spear,
and I run, marching the lower path and climb up the trunk of the geregerói of Ngámangel,
I go; there is it full of chiefs and my friends and godlike human beings,
they ask me, they say:
— is it true that Dingeliús desires you,
his heart’s delicate leaf point?
and I said, it is I, it is true,
the only one he desires, the heart’s sprout;
and I go only with the long handle,
the long handle of my basket,
I catch my spear,
and I run, marching the lower path

¹ in fact “the gill slit”.
² from meliko or melégeb to lift up.
³ but the one behind.
⁴ plur. of gogadál her brothers!
⁵ see the former chant.
⁶ okepekápes to carry on a long handle; kul handle.
⁷ from tet basket.
⁸ oméd to catch.
⁹ galēvēl weapon, here a long spearis meant.
¹⁰ okiu to march.
¹¹ maráng true.
¹² strong form for sauál or soál he wants.

	mong másag ra ugúl a bars ra kesau ak bo te meséked re ngi agrsaalik ma rúbak ma r galidëgád.	and I climb up the trunk of Bars ra kesau I go. There is it full of friends and chiefs and godlike human beings.
20	ëokér re ngak l kmu : kau kemërál sosoál a Dingeliús ë goberdíl a rengúl? ma kmu : ng! ak marál di tál sosoál ë goberdíl a rengúl.	They ask me, they say: Is it true that Dingeliús desires you, his heart’s delicate leaf sprout? And I said: It is I, it is true, the only one he desires, his heart’s sprout.
25	mak di mogú o kepekepesi a kul a tik ë mo medí e galëvelék mak remúrt lokiú ióu ráel l mong másag ra madál a Bai rë melólmës ¹ ië meng di melamasá rengmám	And I go only with the long handle, the handle of my basket, I catch my spear, and I run, marching the lower path, and I climb on thefront gable of bai Melómës, then our heart is enlightened,
30	ë te meséked re ngí arsaalik ma rubak ma r galidëgád. ao kér re ngak l kmu : kau ke mërál sosoá la Dingeliús ë goberdíl a rengúl	there is it full of my friends, of of chiefs and godlike human beings. They ask me, they say: It is true that Dingelius desires you, his hearts delicate leaf sprout?
35	ma kmu: ng! ak marál sosoál ë goberdíl a rengúl mak di geteptél ² kung	And I said: It is I, it is true, the only one he desires, his heart’s sprout. And I arrived on the summit.

Chant 218. Gongrégër Vomiting.

Removal of a magic spell by vomiting or spitting out.

A small chew is conjured, and then chewed. The spittle, however, is not supposed to be swallowed, but it is spit, or poured from a coconut shell over some weeds close to the house. In case the weeds die, it is an indication that some sort of magic had been in the body.

ke rekós ³ beaëgálá ra ngerém ë Milól l meskók tial bedógël l longeréger ⁴ ma kmangeréger ku blakekál lólei ⁵ ma direkë kekí la lolei ak góregerí ra gegóiël ak góregerí ra kesámd ⁶ ak góregerál túbong ⁷ l tubo t goregeráng l túbong.	You fulfill your command, Milóng. Who gave this satisfaction of vomiting? And I vomit the previous meal, the magic, and what I have just eaten as magic I vomit it from the spine, I vomit it from the lower jaw, I vomit what I spit out, what I spit out, what I disgorged, what I spit out!
---	---

Chant 219. goságël Consideration.

for instance if someone’s betelnut, which one received, contains some magic.

ke rekós bedagalá ra ngerém ë Golikól	You fulfill your command Golikóng,
--	------------------------------------

¹“bai of light”, heavenly bai

²from getópt the summit.

³*kerekós* or komekós strong form for “you”.

⁴*ogeréger* to retch, to clear one’s throat.

⁵*gólei* magic

⁶basic meaning “gills”.

⁷*tub* spittle.

meskok tial bedógël loságël ma k meságël aiká lë gamelék ra gëlagá lë gëós ë Sagageiegá me ke bedógël ë goságël gamágël ë goságël úlei? ë goságël úlei ë goságël gamágël	give me this satisfaction of consideration, and I test this one, my small chew, today. Sagageiegáng fulfill it, the test of the small chew. Is it a test of magic? A test of magic, a test of the small chew.
---	---

Chant 220. gol‘lemél

Preservation of a uingël (Strong) Teeth.

ke rekós bedagalá ra ngerém ë Ngiragolsól l meskók tial bedógël lol ‘lemél a uingël ma k mel ‘lálem a ungelél ngár ‘rag a lagád ra gëlagá le gëós a Sagageiegáme ke bedógël ë ke púk logeáng ² , ë kepúk risóis	You fulfill your command, Ngiragolsóng give me the fulfillmentof the implantation of the teeth and make strong the teeth of any man today. Sagageiegáng, fulfill it, you the corner of the lime rock, the corner of the red rock, you the corner of the lime rock, the bushycorals; you remain in your house (the tooth), the sandy bottom of the sea can be lifted away, people can take it away, only you will stand.
ë ke púk logeáng ë kesúp ³ l mëránd l kië ra blim l láilpetáoet l ka le mesúg l ka lë mangaŋ ⁴ më dim dëgeróng ⁵ .

Chant 221. mora binges⁶ bedúl Against Headache.

ke rekós bedagalá ra ngerém ë Gamngél ⁷ meskok tial bedógël lo mekepeketei ⁸ a bingësbedúl ma kumekepókët kur tial pteúl ngar ‘rág lagád ra gëlagá lë gëós ë Sagageiegáme ke bedógël i tiá lul ‘ál ⁹ re ngí a metangetáng ¹⁰ a pteúl l bersóiög l kië ra ugúl a bars ra kesâu ¹¹ góbilëgëiuel ¹² momekepóket ra gelsél	You fulfill your command, Gamngél, give me this fulfillment, make a disintegration of the and now clear this head of any man today. Sagageiegáng, fulfill it, this song of her, the double headed bersóiög -boa snake, which lives in the trunk of the Bars ra kesâu. Woman millipede, you clear in the interior
---	--

¹ golal ‘lem the magic of planting, from mel ‘lálem to plant.

² gogedál lime in contrary to volcanic risois; poss. pkul nose, cape.

³ krisepsúp wooly-haired, curly.

⁴ from ngu to take.

⁵ v. degór stehen, nämlich der Zahn

⁶ from omínges to have a headache, WALL.: omíngs.

⁷ the female inventor of the magic.

⁸ omokapókët to loosen something entangled, for instance the hair of the sick person.

⁹ l ‘ál song.

¹⁰ matáng forked.

¹¹ magic tree in Ngariáp on Peliliou, chant 215.

¹² correct góbil l gëpúl, see Vol. 3, p. 239.

a ngak kumekepóket ra ikrél	I will clear the exterior
peketí, goití	disintegrate it, throw it away,
ngar‘rág a lagád a dika l meringěl a	so that that man has no more pain
ptelúl.	in his head.

Chant 222. Magic “Against Patchwork” mora telbákl.

Some people are of the opinion that a new item, for instance a house, can cause sickness for its inhabitants, when a tattoo is patched. Therefore people talk about such a telbakl patchwork before it is inserted. For instance when a part of the floor is newly done, then people clap on it with their hands and say:

gětá ¹ , gětáo a galëu maramáng!	Old stuff, old stuff, the new one has arrived!
melák kom ketágeb ²	you should not stab each other!
a gatáu a di lmuk	The old stuff should only be silent,
ma kau a di lmuk	you should be silent,
ma ngak a di lmuk	and I should be silent,
l mo garagár; l mo gáragar	in the future, in the future,
l mo garagár meketékět.	in the future, a long, long time!

Chant 223. gosaur Means to Tie,

For instance a canoe in a race, a too busy colleague, table companion, etc.

ke rekós bedagalá ra ngerém ë Miseg	You fulfill your command, Miseg
ë mel meskók tial bedógël losaur	and give me this fulfillment to tie fast,
nak m lagá re ngí l mesaur re ngar‘rag	and I position him, to tie any man today.
a Sagageiegá me ke bedógël	Sagageiegáng fulfill it!
ë kengéng ³ ngugeál, ⁴ e kengéng	Why are you staring at the lime
risóis	rocks, why are you staring at the volcanic land!
kosâu lulk, kosâu lë gosékëd	you tie the banyan, you tie the
kesóu surí ⁵ ngar‘rag a lagád ra	red fig,
gëlagá lëgëós	you shall find any man today,
ë Sagageiegá me ke bedógël	Sagageiegáng, fulfill it.

Chant 224. goloódo ⁶ ra dáob

Means To Beckon Down The Sea.

spoken while standing, at high sea waving the hands, also in malevolence against abundant foreign plantations, to hinder their prosperity.

ke rekós bedagalára ngerém ë Mulbekl	You fulfill your command, Mulbekl,
meskók tial bedógël loloódo ra dáob	give this fulfillment to beckon down the sea,
mak meloódo kur tial dáob ra gëlagá lë gëós	and now I beckon down this sea today.
ë Sagageiegá me ke bedógël	Sagageiegang, you fulfill it;
a dalál a rul, a dalál a rai ⁷	the mother of the ray, the mother of the flatfish,
a dalám, a dalám, a dalám	your mother, your mother, your mother.

¹ from gätäu for of things.

² from tagáb fish spine.

³ olengéng to look constantly at something, to stare; after all, he cannot go through them.

⁴ gogeál the lime rock, in contrast to the volcanic pélau-land, the rock of which is called risóis.

⁵ also from mesâu to bind.

⁶ from meloódo to wave down, also to wave, to walk slowly.

⁷ ray a flat fish; the flat fish should affect the lowering of the sea.

Chant 225. gol ‘lálem ¹ Planting Magic.

Dira tmalaitóngng kol ditém ²	Diratmalaitong, this no doubt is
gëlēi	your seedling, this one,
ma k turumókl ³ u vei	and I plant it,
ke mo ugelíus ⁴ , ëke bakai,	you will be a coconut trunk, you a pot,
ke matáng a luongór ⁵	you a forked (wide) pandanus.

(KUB. VIII. p. 160: Kadhé Kadhil Ardhil Athamalëghoy ko el dithém keyléy ma ak toromokluáy, mo ko mo apagáy, e mo ophthank, e mo ophthank, e mo ophthank el hongór: he should become as fat a pot, like a stone lean-on ptangg, like a pandanus.)

Chant 226. Klakelál Ngaregolóng (see story 37),

Alternateal singing of Ngaregolóng, sung during a walk in the moonshine (melil a búiël) addressed to the people of Ngetitóng at Keklaũ, who are loved by the woman.

kau bo mo múp, mo go meŋ	You go fishing with the baskets, and when you come,
ë pedëpedëgei ⁶ , l‘lóa ⁷ ra	I pick it up with the hand and place
monggóngg	it on the stem of the leaf blades.
ng gobúk ra rebád re Ngetitóng	as a present for the sleeping ones in Ngetitóng.

Chant 227. Chant of Ngireklsóng,

Rubak I of Meróng.

log.: Bai 110 III^a illustr. d.-pl. 26^f.

He always wanted to go fishing, to catch turtles, so that his people got many nets and canoes for him. His place Meróng in Ngasuás was so hated that a blolóböl of Meróng along with the daughter of Ngireklsong, who was móngol there, was burnt on a pyre.

Ngireklsóng, ke dililángel a géd	Ngireklsóng, you always lament on the reef,
me ked o tebedá ⁸ mo rengí	and we sent for him
a kluk ⁹ l vúkëd	a kluk -net
ë logá ¹⁰ delóböğ ra káep	and put down a delóböğ for a sailing canoe
ë luskú ¹¹ gomangederáol	we will find men fishing with torches,
ë Ngireklsótia ged l di medéldólog ¹²	Ngireklsóng this reef has only high tide.

Chant 228. Song (l‘lal) at the Moonshine Game.

1. Woman from Nggeiangël sings:

ng di kerdél ¹³ ië Gorotókl	When Gorotókl had landed (from Gorëör)
--	--

¹ from mel‘lálem to plant

² from dait taro seedling; the first one is spoken to, the other ones are planted without much ado.

³ rare word for to plant.

⁴= úgul a líus.

⁵ from gongór pandanus

⁶ from omódeg to grab with the fingers, to eat.

⁷ from mellagáng to lie down WALL. or melái to bring.

⁸ from tuóbëd to go outside.

⁹ the value of a piece of kluk-money.

¹⁰ ogáng, mellagáng to place down. WALL.

¹¹ from oŝĩk to look for something.

¹² medëi dead, dólog flood, the dead water at the level of the tide, which is to say the fishing ground will not get dry.

¹³ from kmërd to land.

l totekli ¹ a kambilál	he took and swung the long knife
meng omekikdakd ² ra Túogong	and he alarmed Túogong (Nggēiangǎl).
	2. a man from there:
a gútũm a mageitǫgut	The ground is soft,
ma rúbak a kedrengǎǎl	and the chiefs are idiots,
m armeau a tokedngárǎǵ	the people are effeminate
ě sě regomkó tǎ mesig ³	If they were only strong!
aki ogotí ⁴ a klsagál	We want to show manliness,
me tomís a rumúklǎl	so that the young girls see it.

Chant 229. Kerekórd,

a chant in the bai, during which the head is held tight.

soiló ⁵ , kungól ⁶ Ngarekamais	Sweetheart I was a bai-girl in Ngarekamais,
ng ngueo lǎkók ⁷ marál dil	people probably took me for a real woman;
l du re ngak l kmu:	they told me and said:
gotúngel a mei meng di mǎdám ⁸	The bag here, it is only your face
l ngara tét	in the basket,
l dio kúl ⁹ a klě uěiúi!	it is only the handle of the sweetheart. uěiúi!

Chant 230. Gelsegésep, important chant in the bai.

ak melóug a Bangërengúiěs	I collect leaf fertilizer in Bangërengúiěs,
ra medeu rě Gomakátl ¹⁰	in the hollow of Gomakátl,
ma berekí ¹¹ a mǎdák	and when my eye is roving
a iárs a me melúiiěl ma kmu:	there comes a sail, it curls and I say:
metótekrá ¹² a mongol me	They have a cargo of bai-girls, and
tóungariákěd	they look up satisfied.

Chant 231. Galitúk,

a “dance song” of the Peliliou-people against a Ngeaur, because they had sold their land to the phosphate company.

te mlang ma gerál a gútũm	They took the price for the land,
mardelép gouvúgǎl	and the spirits are deceived
l diak lodengēi	they did not know it.
a Jegád remóked	Jegád remóked,
mo lěúel rar mageitǫgut l mēi	today bring the weak ones here,
a Matagád m rénged	Matagád, listen,
áika melemě iěúel ar mageitǫgut	these ones should come today, the weak one.

¹ from maltekákl to touch and pick up.

² from omekdakd to alarm

³ mesisík strong

⁴ from ologólt to show.

⁵ from klsau sweetheart, songék my sweetheart.

⁶ from móngol hetaera; in Ngarekamais on Goréör was a bai.

⁷ from alekóng probably.

⁸ mad eye, face, the meaning here: your representative in my basket.

⁹ kul, the handle of the basket, the meaning is a keepsake for the sweetheart is safely in the basket.

¹⁰ The mountain on Ngarakedlúkl, where the mother of Medegēi pélau is buried, see illustr. 39 in Vol. 2..

¹¹ root word omárag to submerge WALL.?

¹² from olták to load

Chant 232.

Chant for the Ruk-Dance with the goroviděl- bluefin trevally fish.

sitting: Old words; their meaning is not known takebud tálanga kemó lólemei rangatěl leměřěou ra ilangě túmetai standing: (during the 2. verse the goroviděl is held under the left arm).

sokeví ¹ silo mekeló ohú, ohui ē, ē hú
ei, ei, ei iěng hó, ei ei ei iěng húi ei iěng ho ei iěng hui uíririririri ² ei iěng ho ei iěng húi petkěleg ³ teperekelú děsuókl eng hú
ei ei ho ei o hui.

Chant 233. Old Ruk-Chant of the Galid spirit of Ngeaur, supposedly from the creation-chant.

ailekel ‘lí diul oi oi oi c věkelí ei hu
ker ‘róker rě gomorobol ‘l ai diul e věkelí
bital lurúkul e desuóklě hu a uldósep e desuóklě hu geiesang ialekó gǣtũ rengi kesemeledíu mesél mesúmeg ra tiróter ra maróter oai hu hu ei desuok ei úg!

Chant 234. Repetí,

a dance chant, loudly presented by a man on the dance-stage, standing and clapping the right haunch. The chorus interrupts; someone from the other party also sings a golekál, which his followers pick up as well.

Soiló, kol marengúk a kmú, ke metituát
ě mengaběgúp rengák
gobobád a l kebesēi
5 ma l mǎl ‘ló ⁴
uréng ⁵ re kamám
l di gǎlitá ⁶ ra meákl
ma tǫkoi, mǎ l du kodelám ě kau gokór ⁷
mě merúker ra bar ‘r ma gadegól
ě Ngaragamér a mlě kauotú ⁸ me te ngilai ⁹ a teběgǎl
ma k di mengíkai

¹ it means “to crawl up”.

² battle cry, see story 125.

³ it means “to jump up”.

⁴ l’lóměs day.

⁵ ouseng to wish, to desire.

⁶ golóit something that has been thrown away, from mengóit.

⁷ from olrngakl to refuse? N, 122.

⁸ from oltaut to affirm or oltú to put inside.

⁹ from ngu to take.

	ra makaséngēl l ngeül ¹ .	in deep water as a piece of driftwood.
	Chant 235 Bóid.
	Dancing chant.
	1.
	a logül ² ma bodemëgáio	I urge, that we to go to sleep!
	arngabárd a kmal ungi rengrír ³	The foreigners have happy hearts,
	metoskerí ⁴ a kodelir; ë mótog ⁵ a rengrír ë mád	they live a long life, and when their
	e kid a ră Pēlāu a me kebelúng ⁶	desire is fulfilled they die;
5	l diak a babiér re kid	yet we in Pelau are stupid,
	meng di galemgám ⁷ a rengrír a re ngēlekéd ⁸	we have no paper, and the hearts of our children are completely broken.
	2.
	teluól tumetúm l lild	a pipe made of bamboo
	a milúgol ⁹ a klngit réng	creates sadness of the heart;
	meng m lo ugúl ë te l mángel	this was the reason they cried.
10	a logül madebódemagáio	I urge that we to go to sleep!
	a sagalíd a ngu a ngáok	Our girlfriend takes the pipe
	meng olekél ¹⁰ kmúl kmo:	and shouts the name and says the following:
	ngarág lagád ¹¹	Anyone,
	ng kmál ë gatík a re mekedúng ¹²	I absolutely do not want the well behaved one;
15	l sel sorír ¹³ a lodbegei	that one, who they want, I pushed away,
	a sel mo soak ¹⁴ , a di le gēmúr	that one, whom I want, they break.
	te milekúr ¹⁵ a kodál	Do they bind to death?
	meng di úngil a toráel a pngir ¹⁶	But it’s only good, when showiing fish baskets their place
	më di l lë gētik, e di kekēngēi ¹⁷	although I do not want, I agree.

Story 236.

Bídél ¹⁸ a kodál. Dancing Chant of Death

golekisél ¹⁹	standing
	1.

¹ ngeül taken; a piece, that has to be taken, story 73.

² logül gerúng from melág “to reprimand” WALL.

³ mageiváiu to sleep.

⁴ oskerí to come in time; kodelir her death (at an old age), see line

⁵ motóg to get everything you want

⁶ the Palauans think it is written in the books when you have to die.

⁷ galemül broken over one thing, galemgám broken over many things.

⁸ ngálek child.

⁹ omígöl to begin whereof úgul the trunk, exit; klgnit actually “wickedness” from mkngit.

¹⁰ olekér to shout a name: she should play the name with tones; she does not want to marry as the parents intentions, but wants another one.

¹¹ “other people” see story 215 about Bars ra kesau, line 10.

¹² kedúng “well behaved, soulful”, an older, usually a relative.

¹³ soák, spoken sauák, I want; gatík I do not want; *oldúbēg*to push away.

¹⁴ soák, spoken sauák, I want; gatík I do not want; oldúbēg to push away.

¹⁵ from mekúr to tie, like in chant 236 line 15 about death.

¹⁶ from púp the fish basket; oráel to direct where, when the first catch was unsuccessful, the same is done with a wealthy suitor.

¹⁷ from kóngēi to consent.

¹⁸ from boid, (chant 235) usually sung quietly by 3 men, then taken over by the crowd.

¹⁹ olekís to stand up; dance standing with clapping hands.

kid argád a gēdēgül
l di godegūlí a kamangatáng ked ng ma galdegēd ¹ ra klungá
ma kamangatá bodedēbēgí ² 5 ng mo ungi pesúl
a kekeringē ma kedebengá ma kodál a d ital tokói ng diak a mo galdegūlél ³

ng di dbēgék ⁴ l kē kersós
10 a rengúk ri tiál pelúlagád a delēbēákl ⁵ di ma mád
l mangí eiē kodál.
ë le bló lagád mē dilsáng
mē dē kirēl ⁶ goruál
15 me dulekúr ⁷ a pelúlagád
aikál blai ma gapdúi ra ked gosisú.
ng tagá goipkngí

tirekal dalád l magālid ⁸
a di mesulá ⁹ lomngér ¹⁰ a klsül ¹¹ 25 ë kid a diak bod ¹² ë gad
l diul ¹³ ngomedá ra rákt
ë mangí uē kodál
ë le blo lagád mē dilsáng
mē dē kirel goruál
30 me dulekúr a pelúlagád
aikál blai ma gapdúi ra ked gosisú.

ng tagá goipkngi
ku lukíu, tial mookíu sel mo imiu ra kodál
ë le mekid a didevekl
ng gubelíd a kodál

¹ from mangadēgēd to diminish.

² from mangedép to shorten, kekedēb short.

³ see above gōdōgūl skillful, godeguli from mangedegul; galdegul the manipulation

⁴ from dūbeg scion from human beings and plants.

⁵ melēbēákl to are up to mischief.

⁶ mangerēl to twine a thread; góru the middle part that holds the outrigger; if it is not strong, then the canoe is in danger and he cannot leave.

⁷ mekúr to tie down, see chant 235, line 17.

⁸ magel to give birth.

⁹ mesāul to take pains, mesuláol tired.

¹⁰ om ngér to breastfeed.

¹¹ in fact “lie”.

¹² bod in fact “we go”.

¹³ diul together, all.

We people are skillful
we put in order what has gotten too long,
we reduce from the size,
and the long one we shorten it we bring it into a good condition but when it is too small and too short then death has only one language then there is no other way.

2.
When I was an offspring and curious,
was my heart on this human world;
my malevolent deeds soon make die,
all that remains is only death.
If it would be a human being, so that we could see him,
we would twine thread for his outrigger,
we would tie down the world.

This house and the gapdui-trees of the savannah are same.
Who can free himself from him?

3.
This one, our mother, who delivered us,
who in vain took pains to feed us:
but we cannot be men,
we all die of sickness,
all that remains is death.
If it would be a human being, which we could see,
we would twine threads for its outrigger,
we would tie down the world.
This house and the gapdui-trees of the grassland are the same.
Who can free himself from it?
Now one goes here, then goes there,
in order to evade death,
and if we walk around in circles,
death is overthrowing us.

Proverbs, *golág ĩdngér*¹ or plkul a tokói.

Story 237. Omagár a ngara bilo which is to say to fill into a coconut shell (bilo = galebingēl), in fact defamations that one cannot forget².
log.: bai 133 IV^a I. illustr. d.-pl. 26^c.

Once upon a time, some women wanted to have some water and called their sons, but they ranted and refused.

Story 238. Kelél a Gosektél “Gosektél’s Food”, log.: bai 133 IV^a r. Illustr. d.-pl.26^d, who received from his wife and her 3 children only the garbage gorovikl, therefore bad food for a stranger is called like this.

Story 239. (bai 99 VII^b).

*a ruvúmk mlai a tekil*³ a Tuápēl a heavy loaded canoe is sailing from Tuápēl, which is to say the canoe could be heavily loaded, because it was in the channel and very close to Ngurusár.

Story 240.

a lilángēl a mlo ogorēgúr,	Who has been weeping, will be laughing and:
a rul ě gērēgur, a mlo l mangēl	Who weeps, will be the last one laughing.

Story 241. Against the Sneezing⁴ of Strangers in Ngērámēs⁵.

Question:	kemiu a ra mēngirs ⁴ ra Ngērámēs a sngosngiu a di ng a ra bab l diak m ko tie Júg ⁵ me tie Eóbog me tie Rekeríkl e rúbang ng uéa láko ⁶ tomóug ra goáol a rirámēs	You, who you are marrying to Ngērámēs, your sneezing is always high; you don’t say here Júg, here Eóbog, and here Rekeríkl, the chiefs! It is like a waterspout in Ngērámēs.
Reply:	kemám a ra mengírs ra Ngērámēs, a sngosngam a di ng a ra eóu, legemetí ⁷ galabag ⁸ l ngedekóng gamáis ⁹ a mangamáis ra Ngērámēs	We, who we married to Ngērámēs, our sneezing is always low, along the mast of the sail, it is straight. The spirits make spirits in Ngērámēs.

Chant 242. Bóid “Dancing Chant” for Ardiál

1. Verse.

aukeúl ¹⁰ di melelebedébēk ra melemótōm Nguliēl ng lulí Pelau ng diak l meng kuk sola aūleiēt	I am always sitting and thinking of (him, who) enlightens Ngúlitel. Did he create Palau or not? Then there is no contradiction.
--	--

¹ mengelégēl to withhold WALL.
² Mnemonic words for an event that always should be remembered.
³ poss: from olták “to ship”
⁴ see story 80a ending.
⁵ particle, to express one’s intention; (see chant 242, line 63).
⁶ olegémet to rebuke WALL.
⁷ W. GIBBON interprets like this; but the beam of the sail that is at the bottom is called galág ; galábag poss. . . . il is the marriage present of the son-in-law; this also does not make sense..
⁸ gamáis, kamáis is a small insect, people suspect it to be an ancestral spirit, mangamáis to use the insect, to apply
⁹ see about the gerabai-designer, part IX a; about the dancing chants ¹⁰ ulat to sit on the buttocks; kíei “to sit” construction?

rsél:

5 ngalmúgēs a ker‘regár l mo megei me kid tial melúgēs
e di diak domtap
ng osébēk a blak, remūl a blai, me kid tia l meréngēd

10 e di diak domtap
ng dimla mo melemótōm, l kmu:
Pelau, bo doungeáol
e di diak ra rengud
e meng di mla mo ra a Uleúūel

15 l tekingír a re gēdud
l ologólt ra aúngil ra kemiu
*kamo mad, e a kurakadaū*¹ meng dimlak o bo ra Pelau ng medéi l di galóit
a ra mongolulāu
e kemiu a ra mongolulāu
a di omēs, di obés

20 e diak obóng (repeated from line 5) geimo ra tágēl
a melemótōm raNgaragokl a lungiēl Pelau a diak domtap e meng kuk sola auleiēt ngalmúges a.

Chant 243. Boid.

Dancing chant about the Japanese Uarisáng.

*delepeákl l kompali a ngara Degēl*² di madmad
armad ma ra mo obagákl
Seki, kau molebedébēk

5 ng gabūl a dālál a Uarisáng
l mangīl e ngi a diak labóng
*e medéi meng bai*⁵ gabūl

rsél:
*ng medéi l di gālóit*⁶ ra *blil a Doktang ra Garangakl*⁷.

¹ from oréked to hold, see WALL. 1911, p. 230; ending au = you.
² This can only indicate the Japanese trading station in the Ngamáí Bay, where in Vol. 1 is written Blisang; called Dekel
³ During the typhoon a canoe with Japanese drifted away.
⁴ an old Japanese, who was in Palau during my time.
⁵ in fact “more poor”
⁶ mengóit to throw away WALL.
⁷ spirits’ place (story 17a Kerengokl in Blisang) obviously nearby Degel.

Refrain:

He draws wood and puts it down,
and we draw this,
yet we do not mark;
he makes houses,
and we bind this,
yet we do not mark.
He has not enlighten, he talks:
Pelau, (we) go to make a garden,
it only is not in our sense
he went first to Uleúūel following the command of our Gods,
in order to do you good,
that you will die; I would hold you back,
that you would not go to Pelau.
like above. etc.
who judge;
you, however, who judge,
simply look, just forget,
and do not leave.
another verse:
to clear Ngaragokl is good for Pelau; not do mark and then no backtalk.
line 5–20, here repeated.

10	langalél gombebidúal ¹ ra Ngamalágal ma Degěl, ma a Tokioma Jokohamáng. Masatang, ngara a ugúl? ng Bai medéi Raksid	(His) crying is heard pleasantly in Malágal and Degel, in Tokio and Yokohama. Master, what is the reason? It is really dead Raksid, and my heart is sad, The weeping it is flowing out (about) his sickness (for) this good speech; he is dead and lamentable, he dies full of fruits, and his heart is waiting.
15	ma rengúk a di mekikngit ² l mǝng oltóběd a langěl a raktél ngika lúngil mǝlǝkói e medéi mǝng Bai e gabül ng medéi lpakangalákāl ³
20	mǝng mangiuäl ⁴ a rengúl. 2. gaimo ra tágel: kuldāngei ⁵ e Uarisa l kmu kamo mad, e a kurakadau meng dimlak o bo ra Pelau ng medei l di galoit	another verse: If I would know, Uarisa, I would say, that you will die, I held you so you would not go to Pelau. as above, etc.

Chant 244. Boid.

Chant against a taro sickness, performed at the emperor’s birthday 1914 in Ngaregolóng.

Tiaia renguk l di mǝkikngit ⁶ ra meklegél Pelau. ng mad e kid a mo bad ulekér a dǝngǝs a tara ugul gomangá’e e dikesēi. a bel’lói a tara ugul gomangá’e e dikesēi. a liüǝs a tara ugul gomangá’e e mlo diak r tial eólt ma Ngamalágala tara kompali ng āugai, ng luli, Pelaung diak? l ng diak a udóud, a kar di oturők a delómǝl e medéi. tiar rakt a ngara meséi l mo klóu l mo makoád ⁹ a sers e kid e kiei me kǝdamekeráng?	This my heart is sad about the Palauan taro patches; they are dead. Where shall we lie down? mangrove fruits (are) the only basis of the food and little; wild yam (is) another basis of the food and little; coconuts (are) another basis of the food, but there are none because of the wind ⁷ ; and (in) Malágal is a company ⁸ , I do not know, did she create Pelau or not? However, there is no money, we only take out the plants and die. This sickness is in the taro patch, it is huge it will attack the gardens, and we sit (here); what shall we do?
---	---

¹ construction not known.
² dimin. of mekngit bad.
³ word and meaning unknown.
⁴ mangıl to wait.
⁵ from medenengéi to know, ak uldengei I knew.
⁶ formation of the word a. chant 243, fn. 6.
⁷ obviously the typhoon of Nov. 1912, about the taro mold.
⁸ trading company (Japanese)
⁹ okoád to fight WALL.

Chant 245. Chant For The Emperor Of Germany.

Golekisél. a pelú ra Sapangiol a gatik l ng diak l ml’lie ¹ Pelau The German country I like, l ungúngil mǝlǝkói e metět, e bekëu ma tia Pelau lungiang	Standing Dance. I do not like the land of Spain; a pelú ra Siamal a sauák it has not made Pelau. because its talking is good, it is wealthy, it is brave, and this Pelau is now good.
--	--

1. ugúl Kaisar, ak diüǝrréngǝs a gaisém l ngara papier l kangarúge ² lobak l ng melómǝs a regnúm e úngil melebedébǝk e Kaisar ke melebedébǝk, ma ra Gapmal golap l me ra Pelau. me Pelau a diúngil l di úngil l dital kut alogúl ku mak mes a bedengél.	1. opening Kaiser, I only hear news about you in the newspaper, that you are a first class rubak, because your spirit is bright, good is your thinking Kaiser, you think, and the administrative people bring it to Pelau; and Pelau is only good, only good and always only good. Oh, if I could only see his appearance!
--	---

2. gaimo ra tagel Kaisar, ak diüǝrréngǝs a gaisém l nga ra papier l kangarúge lobak ng melómǝs a rengúl a Paropesong l melúgǝs a mla tekingél Pelau meng mo més a Kaisar ra Siamal.	2. Another Verse. Kaiser, I only hear news about you in the newspaper, that you are a first class rubak; enlightened is the spirit of the professor ³ , who writes down the old customs of Pelau, and it will see them the Emperor of Germany.
--	---

¹ see merıl
² ugei from, foremost, arguél the first spirits, only known as a redupl. See WALL. P. 66.
³ I, the one who recorded this, is addressed. People of Ngaregolóng wrote the song for the emperor’s birthday in 1914, when I had already left 4 years before; in those days Goréör had not enough food, so that each place celebrated on its own (see chant 244).

Previous page: Girl carrying dunger leaves. Above: Motil and Mangkurukur in front of large Pisag taro plant.

Glass plate scans, Hamburg Museum.

Section VIIIa. Botanical Index.

KUB. named only few plants; WALL. recorded many names, though, also only these. Around 38 are from MAC CLUER (M.C), they are especially important, because they show that in those days for instance kemím Averhoa, milu mais, sweet potatoes, and pineapples were already on Palau.

In order to improve the knowledge about plants (delóměľ), especially those important for the natives and for commerce, I established a herbarium, which I transferred to the Botanical Institute at Dahlem, nearby Berlin, where Prof. Dr. G. VOLKENS ¹ categorized the material as far as possible. He had been on Palau himself, though only for a short period of time. After my stay, P. RAYMUNDUS (RAYM.) and LEDERMANN (LED.) put together bigger collections in 1914. A larger part of the more pleasing and cosmopolitan ones, but also of the more rare and more important forms, were drawn and painted by E. KRÄMER indicated by E.K. with the nr. of the water color). VOLKENS (VOLKS.) was able to identify many directly from them. The pictures under nr. 100 come mostly from New-Mecklenburg (N.M.). We hardly have to mention, that we tried to identify the native names of the plants in a very detailed manner. I want to mention, that, like in my early works ², SCHUHMANN-LAUTERBACH’S (SCH.-L.) book Flora der deutschen Schutzgebiete (Leipzig 1901 a. supplement 1905) was significant for the identification of scientific names; of course Palau is not mentioned in it. Most of the plants belong to the Indo-Malayan flora (I.-M.).

Ferns, collected by TETENS, were identified by CHR. LUERSSSEN in ”Ein Beitrag zur Farnflora der P. Inseln”, in the Journ. of the Museum Godeffroy, I. Heft, p. 52. He found 42 kinds and 23 genera. Palauan names are missing. The most necessary information about the flora of Palau can be found in Vol. 1; especially the mangroves are described in detail ³. Some shrubbery is depicted and the landscape pictures in part.-vol. 1 a. 2 generally show a lot of vegetation.

Finally, Vol. 3 informs about the economic plants starting, about the types of wood. Palauans distinguish between the following areas for plants: gogeál lime rock; in the volcanic land (pélau): goreóměľ forest, kéd grassland, rĩľ shore area, golǒgól sandy beach, kebúrs mangrove wood, mangelengěľt mud.

Index of the Local Names of Plants.

(BJ. = ENGLER’s Botanische Jahrbücher, LED. = LEDERMANN).

a. (look for words without a.)

b.

babelú a shrub WALL., see bapelú. (Dendrolobium umbellatum) *(babeluu : Petai laut) báděľ (Macaranga carolinensis) Vlks. Euphorbiacee.

badě rĩrt (Partia tree) Thespesia poulnea Corr. (E.K. 6) big yellow, later reddish flame like flowers, black wood.

bakľ lild (Scheria margaritifolia) Willd. Grass blade with three edges. (tropical twigrush) balaul diong a shrub WALL.

bambú (Bamboo) bamboo, the word was probably introduced later, see bevegěľ a. gesěľ, which is tall and hollow inside, while the bambú from the kedland (Ngarekobasáng) has a lot of wood and few hollow parts; see also dagěľ; lái poss. lengěľ the knot, bed, as a tool ľilut, see story 13.

¹ See in his publication: Die Vegetation der Karolinen mit besonderer Berücksichtigung der von Yap. ENGLER’S Botanische Jahrbücher vol. XXXI. Heft 3 where, on pp. 420—422 information about Palau can be found. Other identifications, by R. SCHLECHTER and others, can be found in the volumes 52, 54 a. 56; especially the last vol., pp.429—577, contains everything known until 1921.

² I refer to a similar alphabetical list of names in “Die Samoainseln” II. Vol., p. 366. Concerning the Hermit Islands (Luf.) in Forschungsreise SMS. Plánet, vol. V, p. 117; see also GUPPY and J.W. CHRISTIAN On the distribution and the origin of some plant- and tree-names in Polynesia and Micronesia, Journ. of the Polyn. Soc. vol. VI, p. 123 and Observations of a Naturalist in the Pacific between 1896 and 1899, vol. II Lond. 1906.

³ See also G. KARSTEN Die Mangrovenvegetation des Malayischen Archipels, Stuttgart 1891 and Jena 1904.

bangá rungliüěs (Whip vine) Flagellaria, KUB. VIII, p. 145 pangar ngúyus for the bottom part of fish baskets (bub ľ kómud) (E. K. 35).

bangikói (blackwood, rosewood)”butterfly”, a shrub WALL.

baipelú Desmodium (Dendrolobium) umbellatum D.C. shrub, small trees with trunks thick like an arm, small white butterfly-like blossoms, often found on lime, but also on Pelau. The leaves are oval, thin, usually partially eaten by flies, which use them to build their nest. Sturdy wood for fire and the handle of adzes. In Polyn. used for fish traps etc. see golúmed.

(molave wood) (Vitex cofassus) bars Premna sp. also called beókl (E. K. 132) tree, small purple blossoms in umbels, black berries as big as peas. On Peliliou, the legendary tree Bars ra kesau (see story 215). Excellent wood for the construction wood for canoes, hard, also for houses (see bai 46), for tools.

basói keam (Tahitian chestnut)a kind of banana, story 169, see tu.

beběgěľút Commersonia (syn. Commersonia bartramia) echinata Forst. Stereuliacee, silver elder. On the edge of the ked in Gorěör, baste for the aprons.

beděbeděgákl Trionfettia procumbens Forst. (E. K. 118) pest plant, see sukos . . .

běděgál (KUB. VIII p. 209 Badhahál) kind of ficus smaller than ľulk. (carolinensis) bedel, probably Macaranga involuerata K. Sch. Euphorbiacee often forming shrubs. Bath; also used as a fertilizer for taro; in the morning smelling of Styrax (coffee).

bekersíu (M. C.: Puck a seu) a kind of lemon WALL., see maráděľ.

bekróu a deredós has a likeliness with Bryonia. Children hollow out the fruits, which are as big as apples, they use them for the game “to carry water”.

bekú, (Bekuu;bakong) būk (buuk) Pandanus, obviously polycephalus Lam. (see VOLKENS p. 455) (E. K. 187 and photo) for the aprons. On the lime rocks, wide leaves for the roofs of the canoe houses, beans 10 cm long, inside golden yellow, outside a green brown cap.

bel’łói (air plant yam) Ipomoea sp.; aerial corms that look like money (see story 60 a. 89), cooked and eaten, see geibárs (wild yams?) a. oliemad, torog.

beókl see bars. (malave wood) beósóg wild kind of taro, see pisěg. Medicine, – Bisech (wild taro) berdakľ a kind of liana WALL.

běřór (melicope palawensis)(M. C.: P-ro-ree Dammar tree, WALL.: bror), according to LEDERMANN pror or gosols, Evodia palawensis LAUTERB., a rutaceae, this coincides with the resin content, nothing of this is mentioned in B. J. 56, p. 509. VOLKENS thought it to be a vitex-kind. Shining-Resin-Tree, not rare on the lime rocks; in former times the resin, ľups ra běřór or ťpitľ, collected in big chunks it served as a means of light in former times. Also can be found E. trichantha LAUTERB. see kertup. (melicope denhamii) bersákl Cirrus kind, a liana (E. K. 36), trifoliate, with small white blossoms.

besěpěs Lianas, from omesěpěs to bind (bobál rope or liana to pull WALL.).

besepesěľ a Ngorót carrying money, story 9; excellent: ľungaruáú, derdós, deul, ľup, galing, gangeidesómel, giutekil, gogáol, golígěg rakikoi, kărăngěľ, kebeas, kěkei, (Salacia forsteniana) kemókom, kúľul, melĩk, ngiděg, řémogěľ, tetáěľ, togodúľik, ťoilálág, togadúľik, uhüi.

besěpěs ě gũmereu (climbing fern) Lygodium scandens (circinatum) Sw. fern, similar to a lozenge; like the liana ngiděg. (Ngidech)

ľesungľaiei (wild hops) shrub with an inflorescense similar to hop and hazelnut-like leaves. (Flemingia strobilifera) bevegěľ (see bambu) a bamboo with good hollow parts, while gesěľ kéd has a lot of wood and less hollow parts.

On the wasteland in Ngarekobásang. Bent bamboo poles are straightened in the following fashion, they are put on the ground and straightened with the help of inserted forked sticks.

Above; Palauan standing in front of a Lulk tree.
Next page; William Gibbon standing in front of a Pandanus tree holding a cluster of Pandanus nuts.
Below: Palauan boy on a huge Breadfruit tree in Ngasias. Glass plate scans, Hamburg Museum.

bívut (WALL.: biut) (yellow mangrove) Ceriops Candolleana (tagal) ARN. (E. K. 170), fruits are used as a betel nut substitute, see pívet.

blábuk see garamál. (Hibiscus tiliaceus)(Beach hibiscus/Hau?)

bleagd (bleached) according to LED. Maesa palauensis Mez.

bóbaj or gabíngĕl (SEM. p. 156 cálebingl) papaya (see cooking, Vol. 3), introduced, fertilizer (Carica papaya L.)

bódĕs a gár, also semoluk, bloom od the sea-grass, as an ornament Vol. 5, part IX^a see gar.

br‘rak (brak)(Swamp taro) big kind of taro, see pisĕg and klap; (Cytosperma merkusii) br‘rak a ngél a beap “mouse”, small aracea (E. K. 159). (Klebgelabeab-Typhonium blumei) btagĕs see ptagĕs (Alexandrian laurel) (Calophyllum inophyllum)

bubeu bedúl (Physalis sp.) (Physalis angulata) (Cutleaf Ground Cherry)

bugĕl a beap (poss. of búög s. t.) (liselabeab) (Spathoglottis micronesia) a white orchid of the wasteland, the “areca palm of the rat”; people told me it was a bolbophyllum kind. However, this is a general term for orchids, see lidél a beap.

*būk(Buuk) (see bekú, gongór, suk) pandanus with wide leaves (Pandanus)

bukl pelú fern with longue tongues. (Bukl beluu) (Birds Nest Fern) (microsorium punctatum) bugaruáua liana with small white blossoms in panicles and yellow berries. Leaves with 8 fingers; fertilizer. Wood for deráu-frames, medicine, see besépes. (Schefflera elliptica/Polyscias macgillivrayi Schefflera-climbing Umbrella plant búög (poss.: bugĕl s. t.) (M. C.: Poo-a-ack, WALL. buuch) (betelnut tree) the areca palm, the nuts are in panicles used for beteling. All in detail; the leaf blades of the stem monggongg are turned into bags, into vessels, into a seat, into a small mat to sit on and into covers, magic. (Areca Catechu) but a gárĕgar (butecherechar) (Pagoda flower) clerodendron sp. (E. K. 28) red flowers, leaves used as a bandage, in New-Mecklenburg the tripartite fruits are used for abortions. (Clerondendrum paniculatum)

d.

dádait (Garcinia sp.) A mangrove tree (E. K. 172).

dagĕl (M. C. ATHAGELL) according to WILS. 1783 bamboo see bambú.

dairot a tree used to color teeth.

dáit see klap, taro cutting.

debak tree WALL.

dĕbegĕl (Debechel) (Lemon) (MC CLUER: Da-ba-acle, KUB.: Dhebékel, Citrus lunetta) wild lemon (see marádĕſel) blistering firewood see story 207, a. medicine (Citrus limon) debúdelgĕt a shrub.

degóul (Tobacco) (Nicotiana tabacum)

degús (Hemigraphis reptans FORST.), acanthaceae, small herb with white flowers, similar to euphrasia.

dekamerát (LED. thekamerát) Soulamea amara Lam (E. K. 122). Leaves are used against skin diseases; fruits similar to Capsella.

dekamerír (Blue fig) shrub with round, blue fruits; money. (Elaeocarpus joga)

delínĕs (Ephiphytic sword fern) a fern Asplenium nidus (Nephrolepis acutifolia) L., growing on the mangrove shrubssee gógemare márek, see Bai 38 VI. Goragĕl (story 13) was born on such a bird’s nest, on which the terátĕr of story 88a was brooding. Game, stalk is hollow, smoked by children.

delebesépĕs a liana (see besépĕs) used as fertilizer.

dĕmáilei (demailei) (Palma Brave) mountain palm, especially at Ngarsúl, similar to Cocos plumifera, small fruits, balls used by children to shoot. The fronds are used for the rul-lines (see fishing).

demedemekúr (Xylocarpus granatum KOEN). A mangrove tree. Meliaceae (E. K. 173) fruit looks like medú lokobóng, it is only a bit more dented and edged, yet the leaves are pointed oval, paripinnate.

dep (deb) (MC CLUER: Thep, KUB.: Dhep, WALL.: teb) (sugarcane,) (Saccharum officianarum)

dĕngĕs (Oriental mangrove) Bruguiera gymnorhiza (gymnorrhiza) Lam. mangrove tree (E. K. 177), fruits have the form of cigar, used to color teeth and are also eaten, chalices reddish. Roots raise like arches (dugaoág) from the mud (see gurúr). Important is story 168 (see part IX a classical front gable).

derdós liana in the gogeál. RAYM. p. 47, see besépes.

deremárm Dicksonia sp. fern (Ngarsúl).

dĕsúm (Australian Bluestem) Paspalum scrobiculatum L. kind of grass (fine, long) used as taro fertilizer, also as a betel substitute, see gúdel. (Bothriochloa bladhii (Retz.)S.T. Blake)

dĕtágĕl Dioscorea sp., kind of yam, liana.

detímĕl (Lolly Berry) Salaciaprinoides var (Chinensis L.), altera, shrub on the edge of the ked on Goréör, fruits like round Capsicum berries, red-yellow, like small oranges, children eat it (I.-M.) see kĕkĕi.

déul a liana similar to Grammatophyllum, see besépes.

diágās young taro plants, see dáit a.

*did mageĩ*see sis and the fish mámĕl a. story 117, etc.

dóko (Sea Hearset) Hernandia peltata (nymphaeifolia (C. Presl) kubitzki) MEISSN.; many tall trees on the sandy beach of a Gol all the way to Galáp.

dórt (Ipil) Afzelia (Intsia) bijuga A . GR. iron wood, (colebr.) Kuntze especially in the gogeál (E. K. 59) needles to sew the aprons, also taro pounding boards, mortars etc., the construction of houses Bai l dort, on the place Biluk l dort see story 166a.

dúdurs Phyllanthus sp., (Palauensis Hosok) shrub with round leaves tightly arranged on top of each other and with small fruits in a three edged form with six compartments, ked land.

dudúl a rúbak shrub. Cloth for old fishermen. Beach (E. K. 71) (Phyllanthus rupiinsularis Hosok.)

dumueí WALL. the bean.

dup ¹ (WALL.: dub) Callicarpa can L. Verbenaceae (Lamiaceae) (E. K. 51), leaves used to poison fish. On Borneo the Dayak people call the Coccel kernels tuba, on Yap yup, liana. WALL. distinguishes a shrub with poisonous leaves and a liana with poisonous roots, see gamogóng, besépes.(Callicarpa candicans var. integrifolia (H.J. Lam.) Fosb.)

e.

ĕáĩĕs i debul (Naked stem Dewflower) flies in the grave Commelina (Murdannia) nudiflora L. The blossom looks like a fly, see ngobúreg.

ĕámĕl (iaml) Rice Paddy Herb Limnophilia indica (aromatic) (L) Merr. var. RAYMUNDI Schltr. weeds in the taro patch, in form of a candelabra. Used for aprons (E. K. 128); fragrant, with purple flowers. Women like to wear it in their ears. Sweat bath. Scrophulariaceae like rtertil. (Peperomia) Peperomia argyroneura Lauterb. & K. Schum ĕás(ias) trees with red flowers, without any value, because they are cursed, see story 161, according to WALL. a kind of mangrove ², the strong acid juice is used as medicine, laxative; according to story 84b used against worms, story 161. Excoecaria agalloca L.(Milky Mangrove. Blind Your Eye Mangrove River Poison Tree) ĕdĕl (M. C.: Ke-a-dle red Jadle yellow). Spondias sp. Anacardiaceae tree, the fruits are popular see story 120b, LED. did not find it, probably Sp. dulcis FORST., see títimĕl. Samoan love apple. Spondias pinnata (h.f.) Kurz. Titimel (Hog Plum) eúmd WALL.: moss.

¹ also the red saliva when chewing betel nut.

² see mekĕkád.

g.

găa. (ge òften equivalent) Microsorium Scolopendria gabagáp (chelbechab) Serpent fern Polypodium phymatodes L. fern formed like a hand. Leaves used as a fertilizer for taro.
gabdui Lodh Tree according to LED. Syplocos chabui BRAND. Symplocaceae, see gapdui. Symplocos racemosa var. palauensis găbelúdës (Chebeludes) Allophylus sp.,(timoriensis) Sapindaceae, flowers in white raceme (E. K. 105) red berries, often alternate, is eaten. Nets and fish traps are made from the twigs, (KUB. VIII, p. 133 a. 145), young leaves used as medicine.
găbelúdës ugěáng treelike. gogeál.
gabingěl papayas see bóbai word for the fish-fence.
gabíběg chebibech tree WALL. Heritiera littoralis Aiton. (Looking Glass Tree)
găbóug see gěbóug. Pinanga insignis Becc.
gaděbeságěl (Brush Cherry Tree) (gadabasagl according to LED.) Jambosa aquea Rumph. Ngarsúl, mountain forest. The fruits are eaten. Syzygium aqueum (Burm.f.) Alston gaděpsúngel Sacred Garlic-pear see geděpsúngel.-Crateva religiosa Forst.f. chedebsungel gaděpsúngel l ked (chedebsungelked) shrub, rust brown raceme of flowers, red beans.Ormosia calavensis Blanco gaděriēi (Asystaria gangetica Nus.) (E. K. 137) purple blossom, Galáp.
gătóug aitouch (Sword Brake) (WALL. cheidouch) Pteris ensiformis BURM. Polypodiaceae (story 194), the common fern of the grassland; for gosúrög-bath, young leaves are eaten with the mesentery of the sea cucumber (ngiměs).
galebingěl cheliob (LED. halabiop) Alphitonia excels carolinensis REISS. Rhamnaceae.
galángěl chelangel (Yellow Teak/Northern Yellow Boxwood) Sideroxylon glomeratum Vlks., Sapotaceae. (E. K. 100) gogeál food for the pigeons.(Planchonella obovata) galebiop (Chelebiob) tree with black berries, pressed flat, in bunches. Wood for Bai, (Alphitonia carolinesis) gálido (WALL. chalidou) Cordia sp. small tree with small green fruits, children boil it down together with syrup. Also a tree with small white flowers (5 stamens) in raceme, pea-sized, white, fleshy berries, see kelau. (Cordia sebestena L.) (Large leaf Gieger tree) galilai (gélilai KR.) Fragraea galilai Gilg. et Bendicht (E. K. 126), see gelilai a. ksid. (plumeria eng.com.name) galing ardeségél liana with leaves similar to melastoma. Ngarsul see besépes. gal'legúos = goredákł money. (Dracaena) (orredakł) multiflora warb. ex. Sarasin galoso, see golodo a. gorul.
galsau (Trichospermum Richii) Seem. Shrub similar to hibiscus, gogeál, seeds like hair a. 2 capsules, aprons. Ledermannii Burret gáluáis a tree WALL.; the fire-trees of Tipětítip, story 17a, see gosekěd.
gamádăg ar búp or mak ra pélau, Ocimum sp., Labiate.
gamaklagěl see gěrsagěl. (chemeklachel-Horsfieldia irya (Gaertner) warburg (chersachel-Horsfieldia palaunesis kanehira) gamangsis or ingodł according to LED. Micromelum Seem. Rutaceae, a tree WALL.
gamarsúög a fern, pinnate.
gamėriděg (KUB. k . . .) Cerbera lactaria (floribunda K. Schumann) HAM. (E. K. 4), wood for containers.
gomogóng (chemechong) (WALL. gamagóng) small tree, purple fruits, as big as a marble, coffee like, inside 5 hard and oblong stones, leaves used to poison fish in small ponds, see dup. (Flacourtia rukam var. micronesica) gamói tree like a popular Nggeiangěl, gogeál.

gaóas (aoas) or goás ground fern, 2—3 feet high, black hollow stems, akin to gaitóug; also for Pteris quadriaurita KET. A. Adiantum lunulatum BURM. (Pteris pacifica Hieron) gapdúi (Lodh tree) see gabdúi (WALL. chebtúi) (E. K. 142) small trees on the grassland (story 236), raceme of white flowers, fragrant, small fruits, ripe blue and red. Food for pigeons; leaves for gosúrög-bath, money.
gar (char) Enhalus acoroides (L.) Steud., seaweed, female flower boděs a gár often as an ornament in a forked form as an inlay on the Bai. At new moon, on May 10, 1910 at 5 o'clock in the evening, the incoming water of the tide in the channel of Săgămús on Gorėör was white because of flower petals. This day of the new moon is called boděsmóng, the day after new moon is called boděsmėi. On July '10, on the day after new moon the bloom was at Ngaremeténgěl. The Two-String-Leaf is used for fishing nets, like in Truk, see KUB. VIII.
garamál (cheremall) (Beach Hibiscus) (KUB.: Karamál, WALL.: cheremál) Hibiscus tiliaceus L. (E. K. 7). Light wood, white; golúngs the baste for nets, fishing line, bowstring (story 10); see stories 14, 19, 137, 174: blábuk = magic stick, wood for bowls see gongúl.
garamál logeáng ¹ (Chermallucheang) Melochia indica A. G. Sterculiaceae (E. K. 87). commersonia bartramia malvaceae garásăg (cherasech) banana variety, see coloring of teeth, see story 16 see tu. (Red Banana) garitěl (M. C.: Car-re-tle, mentioned also by SEMP.) sweet oranges see maráděl.
garitm (M. C.: Car-retum) Parinarium, big and small variety (E. K. 146 a. 147). Preparation of oil and sealant, bow for the deraũ-net, for fishing baskets etc.
gărókět, Freycinetia, narrow leaves, see story 19, compare garságěl.
garságěl a Freycinetia with long leaves, see giűel; supposedly called like this, is used for the aphrodisiac, see medicine, see gartóket.
gáruēi (also keruėau) Callicarpa sp. a shrub, a little bit dup-like, with long oblong leaves, serves as a substitute for kebúi-betel; flowers small, purple, with yellow stamens.
gasaběsagal (see gėd . . .).
gasebúög (WALL.: chasebuuch a pandanus variety) the bush palm tree, akin to areca (búög), there is a nearly pure population in the forest between Ngatpang and Ngarekeai (24. 9. 09), see gěbóug, fruit gelsebúog, see ornament illustr 2^h.
gasemīg (WALL. chasemiich) a tree, such a cape map 2 j 7°, see miěg.
gaskik (WALL.: chasgiik, RAYM.: chaskük or gowért, LED.: kartagu; see kertáku see there). Eurya japonica Thbg. Var. nitida Korth. Theaceae, a myrtle-like bush on the edge of the ked in Gorėör. Leaves for gosúrög-bath. Berries provide ink.
gasngěóng Vernonia cinerea (L.) Less. Composite, thistle-like.
gatkeám (WALL.) a tree see kėam.
gatpúrúk (RAYM.: chatpurek) Dendrobium palawense, Kraemeri etc. and 5 kinds of orchids (E. K. 149, 153) (thus also a fern?), also Dendrobium aff. secundum Lolg.
gavés (WALL.: chaués) Rhus simarubaefolia A. Gr. Anacardiaceae E. K. tree with irregular, pinnate leaves, fruits best food for pigeons besides galangěl, (see Bai 99 III^a), leaves to color black (see story 197), wood for clubs.
gėbiběg (WALL.: chabibech) tree, good wood, fruits formed like canoes, floating.
gěbóug (WALL.: cheboűch wild betel nut palm) or găbóug, bush palm Kentia-form in the gogeál, on Lake Ngardok and so on. Leaves for dance decoration see story 73, catching pigeons from the palms d.-pl. 17^f, food for pigeons see Bai 119 V^b, see gasebúög.

¹= gogeál lime rock.

gedebelót (WALL.) a tree.

gēdebeságal (gasabaságal) Eugenia sp. small white fruits, good, slightly acid, often also for rebótěl, compare gad ě . . .

gěděpsungěl (WALL.: ched . . .) Crataeva religiosa FORST. (speciosa Volks. Yap) (E. K. 143) Capparidaceae. Fruits up to 20 cm long, foul smelling, eaten see Vol. 3, p. 58. Wood used for magic figures see story 18, at the water hole Dibedúk and in the Ngátmědug-forest (j 22°).

geibárs wild yams (see bel‘lói) eatable.

geisápsáp (KUB.: Kaysapsap) Costus speciosus Sm. Zingiberaceae (E. K. 163). Stem used as a hammer for tattooing.

geível see giúel.

gelilai see galilai.

geloágl according to LED. Buchanania palawensis LAUTERB. Anacardiaceae. Tall tree with a brown bark, red-brown berries, ca. 1 cm; also B. Engleriana Vlks.

gělú see golú.

gělhúg castor-oil bush.

gělhúg l pǎlau (Tacca palmata Bl.) (E. K. 127) see sebósöp.

gemudelág a plant.

gerdéu (also gerdău) Ixora pulcherrima Vlks. Rubiaceae (E. K. 148) beautiful red flowers. The galid’s spirit’s favorite flower, planted next to shrines and in the túngěl-groves, used on death mats. According to KUB. I, p. 47 it came from Ngáruangěł, this is of course a legend.

ger‘regěrói (KUB.: Gargoróy) Mussaenda frondosa L. Rubiaceae (E. K. 165) a shrub, though it also seems to have had the form of trees, because KUB. II, p. 119 and VIII p. 203 reports on bowls from Ngáruangěł, they were made from its wood, and the name of the war canoe in story 49 also indicates this; see also money, and ornaments of the mats.

geregúr big white dead nettle.

geróu tree mushroom, WALL.

gěrságěł or gamaklágěł small tree, olive tree; light, soft wood, good for paddling; dark green leaves, capsule bipartite, food in times of famine (see stories 59 a. 89); children eat them, many 1 km north of Nagregobatáng.

gertáku small shrub on the edge of the ked; blooming in May 1910.

gerúměš (Timonius albus Rubiaceae), wood good for handles of adzes.

gěrúr (WALL.: cherull) Jussiaea suffruticosa L. (E. K. 178) yellow blooming crucifere, in damp trenches. On Truk used to color black.

gěrúr ra ngabard “from the West” = foreign, Asclepias curassavica L. (E. K. 166) common weed, known as Lantana.

gesél kéd a bamboo, see bevěgěł.

giúel or geível ¹(WALL.: chíul) Freycinetia sp. (see gartókět) short leaves, flowers used as decoration of the ear. KUB. VIII, p. 141 Risel a Giyul (poss. of ráis root) for fishing-baskets, (also creeper on trees: Grammatophyllum).

giutekíl Liana (WALL.) (from mengiutókl “to twist”) see besépěš.

goáis, kip Crinum spider lily, many in the central Carolines, see pisgerád.

goás see gaoás.

gobesós also goubesós (after the paddle besós, Dianella ensifolia Red. Lily, small blue panicles; leaves in the “form of swords” or, as the Palauans say, “like a paddle”, therefore, all the strands of the baste apron are called like this; magic effect as a head decoration, location: ked,, sweat bath.

goděbísěg seems to be Guttiferae, beautiful tree on the shore, flowers similar to the ones of the Callophyllum-(ptágěš), (E. K. 40), can easily be distinguished, because the leaves crack when held into a fire, the fruits a shaped like a canoe, similar to the Garcinia (dádait), only bigger. VOLKENS did not recognize this, probably a Mimusops-variety, see the tree in Ngatanggau story 12.

góděł see gúdel.

gogáol liana variety WALL., KUB. VIII 145 a. 209 Kokháol for fishing-baskets, see besépěš.

gogáp (KUB.: Kokháp) or gúgap Althoffia n. sp. Tiliaceae (E. K. 41) forest tree pélau, with brown flowers and brown fruits with three keels of 1—2 cm in diameter, good baste for the fine ririaměł gerévut .

gogéd can also sound like góköd, big solanaceous plant, leaves like velvet, see gongeděapěł.

gógemarěmárek (Asplenium nidus L.) see deliměš; black midrib, wide leaves used to wrap breadfruit.

gógod (M. C.: Kokoth) Cinnamomum sp. cinnamon tree (E. K. 71^a). Leaves have a strong smell of cinnamon. Bark of the root used as a substitute for betel nut.

góköd see gogéd.

gokuám (Marattia sp.), fern in the mangroves.

goliběg ra kikói destroyer of the kikói-shell (from mediběg) obviously, because these knife-like shells seem to break on the hard wood of this creeper, see besépěš.

goliěmád (Ipomoea sp.) see oliem.

goliúl' a krásus “magic for scabies”, a shrub on the gogeál. On Tobi used for fishing lines.

golodogóiěł (WALL.: cholodogoel) ra pélau small tree, small fruits, two panicles of flowers, in a nook of the leaves, leaves are serrated, longish pointed. Rubak-bai Goréör.

gol. ra gogeál tall trees, big fruits.

gologoiúla beap “the rat’s whipping paper” Lycopodium sp. see ngólegeiúl.

gologeséngěł tree WALL.

gomud (Oxalis reptans Sol.) small. On Tombara in an altitude of 1000 m, it forms a lawn.

golú (Alsophila sp.) fern tree, (WALL. a palm variety), its black wood is used for combs, stories 148 a. 150.

*golugaŭ*see maráděł.

golúděg (WALL.: choludoch, cork) lightwood that drifts to the shore. Regional provenance is not clear. Used for floats and a plugs, see stories 165 a. 166^a.

golúměd (Desmodium triflorum D. C.) ságal loluměd clover, ardil . . . yellow blossoming Oxalis variety, see bapelú.

gomăgíděł (Meryta Senfftiana Vlks.) Araliaceae (E. K. 131) in VOLKENS pl. XIV, a beautiful specimen at Bai a Dmásăg, Goréör (phot.).

gomáil tree WALL.

gomeriděg tree WALL.

gomudelág (WALL. chumudelach) (see ge . . .) shrub, leaves for gosúrōg bath.

gomuti (M. C. Com-mu-tee, KUB. Kamoley), sweet potato (E. K. 135), also introduced by the British, yet not much planted.

gongagadei a nettle.

gongai desóměł ² shrub with tiny white flowers, yellow on the inside (false laurel).

¹ compare gěvúl millipede; the word that is difficult for us to pronounce, is probably the same.

¹ poss. of góleŭ“magic”.

² the canoe’s float (aesóměł) gets easily caught in the overhanging branches in the gogeál.

gongáiĕl (r), also pronounced gongáĕr, Rubiaceae (E. K. 111). Usually, white, fragrant flowers consisting of 5—6 long tubes, 1—2 cm wide, at the end of the twigs. The berries are red, loved by birds, big like cherries; see story 136^b.

gongaitóng Quroupária Rutaceae liana, Ngarsúl, bright green leaves, reddish flowers in balls.

gongĕděápĕl (see gogéd) Solanum sp. solanaceous plant with velvet leaves, next to the blai, but also grows wild.

gongĕkád Fleurya ruderalis (FORST.) Gaud.Urticaceae, weed.

gongór Pandanus tectorius Sol. everywhere on the grassland, see sug young with long leaves or wild seedling, dry leaves vang (see there), flower bageiĕi as magic chant 213 verse 9; the tree grew out of the fruit, its snake-like branches are the origin of the bersóiög-snake (see story 13). The roots are an aphrodisiac, money, see bekú.

gongól ngabard, pineapple, similar to the gongór-fruit, ngabárd foreign land, for aprons, see kalngabárd.

gongúl Hibiscus moschatus L. low mallow. On the grassland see garamál.

gongut poison, story 5, what is the root word? maybe tonget.

gorai see korai.

goredákl (see gal’legíos) red-edged Dracaena, Dracaena (orredakl) angustifolia Roxb. Liliaceae (E. K. 144) see VOLKENS pl. XI, for aprons. (WALL. choredakl areal roots of búuk).

gorĕdikár Helmintostachys ceylonica Hook finger fern.

gorengĕd Eugenia pendula Myrtaceae, hanging red raceme flower.

gorogúr herb, Ngarsúl, with wide leaves.

gorŭl tall trees in the gogeál,also called galosogóiĕl ra gogeál.

gosekĕd Ficus sp. see story 89; red cherries, famine-food, in former times as a substitute for syrup boiled together with fish down to uásăg, “baste is made into strong ropes” (WALL.), into nets gosum (WALL. dosem) Premna Verbenaceae, fake elderberry, good wood see story 83. then see money.

gosolls tree WALL. see bĕrór.

gosúgöd ĕ gúi Urena lobata L. Malvaceae. Weeds (E. K. 162), purple flowers; arranged in form of a wheel, 5 small fruits have barbed hooks that often get entangled in hair, therefore, “trap for hair”; strong baste for fishing lines.

goubesós see gobesós.

guábang Psidium Guajáva L., introduced.

gúdĕl (WALL.: chudel). Ischaemum muticum L. a. digitatum Brogn., a. Centotheca lappacea Desv. Grass on the grassland etc. Used as a head decoration in story 13.

gúgap see gogáp.

gúiĕt see story 10 a. 195.

gulul Ficus tinctoria FORST., see lulk.

gurúr Sonneratia acida L. mangrove (E. K. 168), see Coloring.

i.

idúngĕl firewood.

ilemlakl sagal and i . . . dil a grass variety; sagál the panicle of flowers. Fresh chewed leaves are placed on wounds.

ilemúl weeds a) a spiked herb in the gogeál. b) Thalina (E. K. 92). c) Rubiaceae (E. K. 180). d) Lindernia crustacea (L.) F. v. M.

imukúrs, also kemím l Pelau, tree, small, at most 10 m tall, flowers with red chalice, usually in small raceme on the trunk; fruits similar to kemím, yet they are round, ca. 8 cm long, leaves are irregularly pinnate.

ingodl see gamangsis.

iúlt or mlagas bitang, liana with leaves shaped like the ones of an acacia, bark as kebúi-substitute.

iumd see e . . .

iváiu see mekĕkád; see Bai 118.

ivódĕl (WALL.: iuódel) a tree similar to Diospyros (a Imül) see P. RAYM. p. 49. Resin from a Imül (see uduiĕs).

k.

kabúi see kĕbúi.

kálau see kĕlau.

kalabasăng (calabash) pumpkin, see bangkil.

kalm according to LED. Couthovia Calophylla Gilg. see illustr. B.-J. vol. 56, p. 549.

kalngabárd (M. C.: A-kulb ne-par-reth) “food of the west” the spiny pineapple, introduced by CHEYNE, as magic against attacks, see gongól ng. . .

kărăngĕl (WALL. kerăngel) liana for the fishing-baskets (KUB. VIII, p. 141 a. 209 Karangl) see besĕpes.

kartub see bĕrór.

kartule according to LED. Decaspermum paniculatum (Lindl) see kertaku.

kĕák Sida rhombifolia L. Malvaceae, weeds, yellow flowers (E. K. 81).

kĕám Inokarpus edulis FORST. Leguminose (E. K. 139) nuts in the form of coins, eatable. Legend of the kĕám-fruit in the dugong’s mouth, see KUB. VIII, p. 181.

kĕbeas (WALL.: kebedás) Merremia nymphaeifolia Hall.-F. (E. K. 104, phot. 1220). Liana, a relative of the Ipomoea, with big yellow flowers and leaves as big as a plate. Opulent creeper, therefore people pay for the clearing of a deserted village overgrown by kĕbeas, see also kesebōkú. The creeper is made into rul-fishing lines, to fish traps, to a plumb line, and so on, concerning medicine; Overgrowing, story 126 b, 129, see besĕpes. (merremia peltata) (merremia) kĕbúi (poss. kebiúl) (WALL.: kabúi) Piper betle L. Piperaceae. Neither mentioned in the Flora nor in the B. J. More about its use in Vol. 3, deflowering. Origin story 97, creeping story 61, money bearing story 203. DE CANDOLLE (B. J. 56 p. 503) mentions other Piperaceae. Further *Piperaceae*n: Peperomia Krämeri and palauensis. — S. kesibibúi, (see E. K. 24 a. 186).

kĕburs (WALL. kabúrs) mangrove forest.

keimád grass, maize-like1—2 feet high see gúdel.

*kĕkei*see detímĕl.

kĕkúl aĭus “crocodile’s tooth” creeper and fern, Ngarsúl-forest, also for several forking Polypodia (Pteris, Blechnum, Nephrolepis).

kĕlău, rare kálau, Cordia sp. (subcordata?) Borraginaceae (E. K. 55) ironwood, sandy beach, pretty flowers; on Ngorót donating money story 9, as a friend in story 185, money, see gálido.

kelĕl a garm “animals’ food” Camptosperma brevipetiolata Vlks; Anacardiaceae, I also found a var. parvifolia Lauterb. Beautiful trees similar to miĕg, when young with enormous leaves, wood for bowls.

kelĕl a mangerengér “the sea-snake’s food” Capparis galeata Vlks., small shrub (E. K. 136).

kĕmókom Derris uliginosa Bl. Legumonose (E. K. 145). Liana with raceme of white flowers. Tĕlámĕs made nets from the lianas, story 193; Peliliou-people are especially knowledgeable doing so (story 38 a. 39); poison for fish see dup, from KUB. VIII p. 146 as Komókum “a kind of seaweed”, on which fish like to feed, misjudged; see ornaments, see besĕpes. (Derris trifoliata-Three leaf derris) kemím or makămím (M. C.: Cummina) Averhoea carambola L. Oxalideae (E. K. 188). Tree-gooseberry; in 1783 WILS. already reports about it, calls it as Carambola. Fruits ca. 8 cm long, light yellow, acidic, in diameter looking like a star with 5 rays.

kemím l pĕlau similar to an acacia, leaves are fine pinnate, fruits are green, as long as a finger.

kengés similar to an acacia, Leguminose, small tree, leaves irregular pinnate, brindle flowers.

kerak according to LED. Jambosa javanica LAM., fruits good, see gadëbeságěl, rebótel.

kerangel see karangel. (Loeseneriella macrantha) kěrdikēs (M. C.: Cur-the-kiss) a high bulrush, popular for grass skirt (see aprons, see gúdel.

kerengímēs a variety of grass, used to plait small bags, see gúdel.

kěřěkúr often pronounced like gurgúr, as KUB. writes it, too, (M. C.: Curra-Curra) a variety of oranges (WALL.), see maráděl story 13 Kěřěkúr raiderúrt.

kerdéu see gerdéu.

kerekúrogól a tree (WALL.).

kerkngot small shrub, similar to a croton.

kertáku (LED.: kartagu see gaskík) Decaspermum Raymundi Diels, Myrthaceae, shrub, at the most 4—5 m. Panicles of flowers attached with the leaves on the stem see kartule.

kertúp (WALL.: kertúb, LED. kartub) Evodia nitida Lauterb. Shrub trifoliate leaves for the gosúrög-bath. Fruit smaller than ngel, but also good-looking, see běror.

keruēâu(WALL.: gerueáu) see garuēi.

kerúl a gasegēs Stockhousia viminia Sm., “medicine of syphilis” a new name for a herb with small nodules, ked, see detíměl.

kerúmēs see g. . . .

kesběágěd see kils . . . shrub. Gogeál.

kesebókú Entada scandens (L.) Benth Leguminose (E. K. 155) liana. Name “moray eel” of story 89, where it grew out of the buried animals and grew over everything (see kebeas) or, because the trunk is carinate, people from Manila cut the stem and the bark and use it as soap.

kesemedú small herb, like shepherd’s purs.

kěségělěngěl, (WALL.: kesengeléngel). Morinda citrifolia L. Ked. see ngél.

kesengelengólom tree WALL.

kesiáměl Boerlagiodendron n. sp.? Araliaceae (E. K. 184) small trees, most beautiful giant umbel with bushels of yellow flowers, big finger-like leaves for the fertilization of taro, depicted in Vol. 3; Ngarsul forest.

kesibibúi a kebúi variety (E. K. 24), M. CLUER Kuss-ebe-booe “to use betel leaves as medicine”, see defloration, medicine.

kesĩk red leaves as a sacrifice in the kléangěl-shrines.

kesĩl (LED.: madagarigar) Jossinia (Eugenia) Reinwardtiana Bl., Myrthaceae (E. K. 182). A tree in the gogeál 6—8 m tall, small, well eatable yellow fruits, money out of the coal, story 157, see also story 152.

kesirúr shrub with twirl-flower, gogeál.

keskús Citronella-grass, introduced.

keskús l degěl Scirpus-grass.

kēsól (M. C.: Kuss-olle, KUB.: Kosol) see sosól, Curcuma longa L. Zingiberaceae (E. K. 138) from the root the yellow color reng (see there) is prepared, as a sacrifice in form of money see shipbuilding, at funerals, for navigators KUB. II, p. 118.

kesúk Codiaeum variegatum Bl. Euphorbiaceae (E. K. 32); also croton, yellow flowers uleóps, accordingly a piece of money, red leaves as sacrifice.

ketungúiět (WALL.: ketunguüt) Cynometra ramiflora L. leguminosa (E. K. 102), fruits like leathery apples, brown with a quadripartite kernel. Good wood. Also Heritiera litoralis Dryand., a Sterculiaceae (E. K. 141) is recorded under this name.

kevért Casearia cauliflora Volks, Flacourtiaceae; also found on Yap (see VOLKENS).

kidel tree WALL.

kilkuls (KUB. VI 79 kilkuls) fern pinnate, leaves jagged; also an ardil kilkuls is distinguished; the skin is rubbed with the herb before the tattooing, in order to make it smooth (KUB.)

kilspeached WALL. tree, see kesběágěd.

kip Crinum see goáis.

klap (poss. klepengél, according to WALL. from meláp) (shoot dait see there) the raw taro corm of Colocasia antiquorum Schott (E. K. 116), in many variations. See taro; money value p. 168 see br’rak, seldom rong; leaf. Death; meláp seems to indicate the poison, the scratching of the raw root, because melápkap means “to scratch strongly”.

klakl Alcalypha sp. Euphorbiaceae, Gogeál.

klabau tree WALL.

kldelel Dioclea reflexa Hk.. leguminosa (E. K. 107) liana, purple flowers, trifoliate.

kldělel a ked a small clover with purple flowers on the grassland.

klorovíkl fern with big, long fronds with smooth edges and thin leaves, for the gosúrög-bath.

klol’lil Acanthus ilicifolius L. Acanthaceae (E. K. 151) guideline for the meander-ornament, klsegědúi Vitex trifolia L., Verbenaceae, small tree with purple berries.

klúlul similar to lavender, see kúlul.

kmekúměr (MC CLUER: Coomer teak tree) tree is similar to ukal’l, see chant 196, verse 5.

kodéngēs mangrove WALL.; see déngēs, koletending Corymbis Ledermannii Schltr. Orchid (according to LEDERMANN).

klúlul similar to lavender, see kúlul.

korai Scaevola (Koenigii Vahl.) frutescens (Mill.) KRAUSE see sérula.

korángēs Barringtonia sp., does not break easily KUB. VIII, p. 224, therefore, used to carry loads.

kótěp (góbet) Counarus polyanthus Planch. Turkish saddle bean, black-yellow saddle in 3 cm long flap pods, berries, gogeál, used as an amulet.

krúmēs shrub WALL.

ksíd Fragraea ksíd Gilg. Loganiaceae (E. K. 108) see galilai, flowers have long white tubes, very fragrant, preferably worn in the ear, on Lake Ngardok. (Name of Bai 122 and of the priestess of blai III in Ngabiúl, Gěbil ksíd).

kuágad fern on the ground, similar to parsley.

kuát (KUB. V, 6 Kwat),- Sciphiphora hydrophyllacea Gärtn. mangrove (E. K. 167) hard and durable wood, flowers used for magic money-name.

kui Melastome, variety with big leaves. See matakui, leaves are boiled and the water is drunk as tea against back pain, story 197.

kúlul (see klúlul) liana creeping on the tree trunks, glued, tightly positioned alternating leaves, fruits dirty red; color of money. (Ficus sagittata) kuskus rush for gosúrög-bath.

I.

lap Abroma molle P. D. C. Sterculiaceae (E. K. 150) similar to hibiscus, yellow flowers with red, fruit with a five compartment capsule, similar to cotton wool. Magic tree for spiders see mangālil. Amulet and debt-collector, (see story 9), juice burns the eyes, baste for aprons, at death. illustr. see Bai 40 VI^a.

lass Pterocarpus indicus Willd. leguminosa (E. K. 113). Pinnate leaves in form of an egg, yellow flowers in clusters, leaves as fertilizers, tall tree at Bai Sägāmús Goréör.

lidél a beap “Spear of the rat”, also bukeal ¹ a beab according to GIBBON and klebenget a beab according to LEDERMANN, Spathoglottis micronsiaca Schlr. Orchid (E. K. 63) ked; also a sp. carolinensis Schlchr. likarbadáog (Davallia solida Sw.) Saccolaba fern, hollow black stems, radical, mountain forrest Ngarsúl. lild cane, obviously Phramites, also the word for “spear”, because the handles are made of cane, and after spear for the Phallus story 11 Boi, fishing-baskets p. 82, arrows p. 125, lild-leaves as emery, the knots gokevĕk, in the cane the galid spirit see story 15. lius (poss. lisél) coconut palm. lokomodelāk purple flower, worn in the ear, E. K. lolo kind of cane, fan-like leaves, similar to Revenalia. lulk (Ficus caroliniensis Wrbg.) (?) Moraceae, big Banyan tree, for instance in the canoe house Ngarbagéd; favorite place of the fruit bats story 189, bowstring, see bĕdĕgál a. gugul.

m.

madudíu (Kleinhofia hospita L.) Sterculiaceae (E. K. 8). Babldaob: madidíu haemostatic, many in Ulimáng, at the southern head of the path. makāmim see kēmím Vol. 3. (ng) mak (Ageratum conyzoides L.) (E. K. 160). Weeds. mak ra ngabárd Ageratum conyzoides L., introduced. mak ra padre (Synedrella nodiflora Gaertn.), yellow small Campanulaceae, introduced. mak ra pĕlau also gamádāg ar búb (Ocimum sp.) (sanctum L.) common basil. Labiate. Weeds. mălāgeiángĕd (KUB.: Malkayangeth, WALL.: malcheiángĕd) Citrus limonum (E. K. 124), see tĕtáĕl, debegĕl, merés, medúk gangarĕl. marádĕl oranges, big golúgāu, small kerekur, garitĕl, sour bekersĕu, see story 13 ending. mashoes according to LED. Canarium palauvense LAUTERB. Burseraceae, as thick as a man, 12—15 m tall tree, Ngarsul mountain forest. matakúi or mesekui (Melsatoma polyanthum Bl.) Ked, children suck the sweet berries, widely common, low shrubs, see kui. medú breadfruit tree Artocarpus incisa see story 19 a. 34, bai 41 V^a, bai 120, orn. d.-pl. 33^a. medúk gangarĕl see malag . . . medu lióu WALL. a tree.. medú lobokóng (WALL.: medú ‘l ogebong) Xylocarpus obovatus A. Iuss. mangrove Meliaceae (E. K. 174) see demedemekúr, fruits as big as a child’s head. Bai 32 V^b (pl. XIV 23). mekĕkád or iváiu (Lumnitzera purpurea Gaud.) Prsl. Combretaceae (E. K. 169), flowers like Rhododendron, good construction wood, mangrove forest. Bai 118 see eás. melĭk (Nepenthes phyllamphora Willd.) (E. K. 183) ked. More in detail Vol. 1, also on Yap, but not in the south of the Pacific. Meliik-(Nepenthes mirabilis)(Swamp-Pitchers Plant) merés (M. C. mariss) see malág . . . wild citrus varieties. meringĕl pain, capiscum varieties (E. K. 123) and all sorts of stinging pepper, the nose of the dying ones is filled with it KUB. V p. 47, see story 41.

mesegelángel, mesegeués trees (WALL.).

meseker‘rák (WALL.: meségerák) tree similar to kesĭl.

meyrooke (M. C.) spanish reed.

miĕg (M. C.: Mee-yuk, WALL.: miich) Terminalia catappa L. Comretaceae (E. K. 110), beautiful tree; almonds of the fruits are consumed, leaf as a message sign, mĕlil a miĕg see story 134a; see story 10 and 17a about Tipĕtip akmiĕg.

milú (M. C.: Mee-lec) maize, introduced.

mlagás bitáng see iult.

monggong stem of the leaf blade of búǒg.

ng.

ngas (Casuarina sp.) on the gogeál, for instance at Ngarsúng, famous because of the race story 16, money.

ngasĕl tói herb, similar to plants of the Spurge family, leaves have a petiole.

ngasil (Wedelia biflora p. D. C.) composite (E. K. 23), weeds, growing exuberantly (see ului).

ngĕl (see kĕséng . . .) Morinda citrifolia L. Rubiaceae (E. K. 140), money, bath, several times in the name Roisngĕl j 38, 5° , Pkurengĕl 27°, Toagĕl Ngĕl j 18° see keséngel ...

ngeltepkul WALL.: a tree.

ngér a ngabárd “Morinda of the foreign land” because of the similarity of the fruits, an Annona (soursap).

ngídĕg (KUB.: VIII, p. 141: ngittek) Lygodium circinatum SW. Fern, leaves up to 7 fingers on a well binding high creeping liana, see besépĕs egumerĕu; fishing-baskets. (Lygodium circinatum) (climbing fern) ngis (Pemphis acidula FORST.) Lythraceae (E. K. 171), gogeál, wood stronger than dort, often made into clubs for coconut fibers. In KEATE p. 299 its bad influence on the blades of the axes is mentioned.

ngmak see mak.

ngmúi tree good for the construction of a house.

ngöbúrĕg (Commelina sp.) juice against patches on the horny skin see eáies.

ngolegeiúl a beap for gosúrǒg-bath, see gologoiúl.

ngólǒm tree, branches with pea-sized, sessile leaves, ficus-like fruits, the leaves are as big as a goose’s egg, small yellowish flowers, wood used as pallets for the canoes.

o.

oliĕg see toilălăg.

(g)oliem mád (Ipomoea sp.) winding plant azure and yellow (E. K. 134), in the taro patches, fertilizer see bel‘loi.

osúgǒd tree (WALL.) see uósǒg.

osúgǒd see go . . .

ouderódǒg (Salomonia cantoniensis Lou.) Labiata (?) (E. K. 181) small herb, ked, flowers 2–3 mm big, purple a. white snapdragons, fruits kidney-shaped, arranged with the back at the stem; pounded and pressed on fresh tattoos.

p.

pălāu (WALL.: peláu) Guettarda speciosa L. Rubiaceae (E. K. 2) wood for bowls and paddles. Krämer: Palau.

pālāu re gúr money tree of the legend (see chant 203 a. Bai 5 III^a), obviously because the fruits are like big pearls pdágĕs see ptagĕs.

pdúl (Barringtonia racemosa Bl.) Lecythidaceae (E. K. 44), the square fruits are floaters, see story 130 see koránges.

pdul a Boi see Ngurusár.

pesúngĕl a iĕi (Fleminigia strobilifera R.) Br. leguminosa hop-like.

pisagĕrád (Crinum sp.) spiderlily, see goáis.

psĕg (Alocasia sp.) wild taro, on Pelíliou eaten in times of need, midrib of the leaf see Vol. 3, removal of the title.

pívet a mangrove-shrub with long thin fruits, like tebĕgĕl for sĕgĕs-rafter at the roof, because of the long straight poles very much valued (see bívut).

pkau tree green fruits like small mango; with two compartments, inside wool (see d.-pl. 7b).

pkngáol (Rhizophora mucronata L.) see mangroves (E. K. 176).

¹ according to WALL. buchúi (poss.: bechengál) the male flower of the breadfruit tree, it has the form of a club (see also bugĕl a bĕap);klebengĕl probably poss. from kláp tarp, thus the spadiceous turnip or the spadices of the flower.

pkngáol (Rhizophora mucronata L.) see mangroves (E. K. 176).
plagéos (WALL.: blacheós) probably a Clerodendron variety (E. K. 189) sun-tree ked, see story 6 and story 197.
For carvings, trunk is hollow with age, splints burn well see but a garegar.
pngei (Nothopanax) Polyscias pinnata L. Umbellifere (E. K. 156).
pror see běrór.
psangál'l (KUB.: sngal, WALL.: sangall) Polyscias fruticosum Harms (?) Umbellifera, at the rubak-bai Goréör, has areal roots like mangroves.
ptagēs (pdágēs) (KUB. Ptakas) Calophyllum inophyllum L. Guttifera (E. K. 1) good wood. Leaves as adhesive agent, see story 98, 137, sacred.

r.

ralm (= ger Truk) shrub gogeál.
ralm l besépēs (Hoya sp.) Asklepiadaceae (E. K. 56) creeper. Palauans named the plant from a water color of E. K. from Tombára, until now we have not found it.
rád mangrove roots of pkngáol a. tebēgel see story 127^b a.
rderdil a. rdersil see rtertil.
rdil kilkult fern, see kilkult.; rdil sosól Globba see sosól.
rebérebelél a tangadik “the sitting beam of the king fisher”. Herb. Good for coloring teeth.
rebótēl (Jambosa malaccensis DC.) Myrtaceae (E. K. 58) leaves for the water to wash the dead (KUB. III, p. 4), medicine p. 270. According to story 80^a the apples must get quite big, they are good to eat see story 54.
Wood is good for construction see kerak.
remiáng (Arinyáng KUB. VIII p. 173) Cycas sp. a palm of the southern islands, from their 5 cm long fruits some kind of starch is produced, that sometimes is poisonous. The palm tree Federico on Guam, mentioned by KUB., is a fern fáding. Gogeál.
remógēl (KUB. Armokol Phyllanthus (Glochidion) ramiflorus FORST. Euphorbiaceae. Similar to a liana galosogoiēl, for fishing-baskets. Dockyard Ngarbagéd.
reng Curcuma-yellow see kesól.
riāmēl (KUB.: Riámmel, WILS.: Riammall, wild breadfruit), Pangium edule Rein., Flacourtiaceae (E. K. 20), fruits as big a child’s head, eatable (stories 90 a. 126a, 123a), kernel poisonous (hydrogen cyanide) see story 172b a., aprons ririamēl, leaves as fertilizer, boiled.
rirs (Tournefortea argentea L.) Borraginaceae (E. K. 21).
riu (Dolichandrone spathacea K. Sch.), Bigoniaceae (E. K. 190), long white flowers, long pods gairs, young as a substitute for betel, wood for bowls; a big tree in Ngarmid at bai Ugularíu.
rong see klap.
roro (WALL.: rórou) Erythrina indica Lam. Leguminosa (E. K. 157) coral tree, leaves for coloring the teeth, canoe, bloom, as a friend in story 185.
rtertil according to VOLK. Urtica globulosa weed; as fertilizer see tertil. LED. mentions as rdersil Lindernia crustacea and as rderdil Ilysanthes veronicifolia (Retz) Urb., both Scrophulariaceae like ěámel.
rur (Bikkia Gaudihaudiana Bth.) K. Sch. Rubiaceae (E. K. 117), white long flowers, crown square , jewelry, on the walls of the gogéál.
rur a ked mint (Ocimum?) similar to Stachys.

s.

sagal chainein (P. Raymundus leg. = geiúiūs needle?) Dendrobium palawense Schltr. bush orchid (E. K. 153?).
sangál'lilem lákl see ilemlákl; sagál lolúmēd see golámēd; sagál a rtertil see tertil, sagál sósol see sósol.
sangál'l see psangal'l.

saū fragrant variety of grass (Ngarbagéd a sau), for the gosúrog-bath.
sěbósōp (WILS.: sopossup) Tacca pinnatifida FORST.
segēsēg a ra malk (segēsēg geko, malk chicken) small ornamental plant with purple flowers, chewed when deep sea divers have bleeding ears and the juice is dropped into the ear.
sérula (?) Scaevola nov. guinense Schl. see kórai (E. K. 22 from N-Mecklenburg).
sis (Cordilyne terminalis Kth.) Liliaceae (E. K. 13). Planted often nearby the house (see d.–pl. 17^b), money, blossom. Magic plant and medicine (stories 9, 100 a. 117), death, see at the funeral. Many varieties: sisil iángēd very tight leaves, didmagei leaves green, narrow and long see story 117, kēmēdúkl (fish) Bl. wide, meregei red stems, gēsígákl chant 203 line 125 red leaves, sisil a delép about the “souls” held in the hand, sisil a dalál aioli (Mangal‘láng) story 203.
sis e bangiaū a legendary bird, obviously because of the coloring of the leaves.
sosól (Zingiberaceae) made into aprons, sagal & sosól especially Curcuma longa L., see kesól, with big reddish flowers (E. K. 115), ardil sosól at rdil kilkult.
soursap (WALL. sausab) new word for Anona muricata L., which is occasionally planted, see nger a ngabárd.
sug young Pandanus leaves, sugomásag, see gongór, buk a. suk.
sugal tree; flowers and young twigs suit the gods of the sea (KUB. VIII p. 148).
sui (Alpinia pubiflora Bth.) K. Sch. Zingigeraceae (E. K. 121) flowers yellow and red, in loose raceme.
suk wild pandanus, see sug.
sukosorokói (Trionfettia sp.) see bedēb . . .

t.

Taro see klap. Arum according to L. More information see A. KR. Der Taro und die Naßkultur, Peterm. Geogr. Mitt. 1928 with illustrations; see d.-pl. 7^c, 20^c, 21^b. tāgelél a gul (“hip string of the rain”. Cassytha filiformis L. Lauraceae, leaves for the gosúrōg-bath.
teb see dép.
tebēgēl (MC CLUER Ta-ba-acle “very hard wood”) Rhizophora conjugata L. (E. K. 175), s. pkngáol a. rád.
Wood for the sticks of the vúkēd-net, for combs and fences.
tebúdēl WALL.: from melábt ”to skin”, a tree, the baste of which is very strong and is used for fishing nets.
tēláp (Zingiberaceae), light varieties of sósol, yellow,axiliary flowers.
teliliüoch WALL. noctilucent mushrooms see geróu a. temingél.
telngót tapioca, yams.
temingél a Gobagád (temoi the “penis” of the bush spirit), a penis-mushroom, remotely similar to Phallus impudicus L. surrounding the stem like a small transparent skirt.
temring (Cannaceae) (E. K. 112) white flowers, green, pea-sized fruits, blossoming in April ’10 next to Bai a Delúi Goréör. Philippinos use the baste for baskets.
temring a ngabárd (Canna indica L.) introduced from the “west” (E. K. 112).
tětáel Citrus variety see marádēl repectively malag . . .
tilol a tree with areal roots, leaf similar to ptágēs, money.
titímēl (LED.: it.) Spondias mangifera Willd. (E. K. 103, phot. 1135) leaves imparipinnate, jagged at the edge, Goréör, as a scale story 80a, coffin, see édēl.
titimel daramaram fruit ca. 4 cm long.
titimel medeēsēl fruit ca. 10 cm long.
tertil (Elatostemma sp.) Urticaceae, similar to common basil, gogeál; because of the transparent stem some glass money is called like this, see rtertil.
tōgödúlik (KUB. VIII, p. 45 tagadhúlik) liana used to anchor fishing-baskets, thorny see besépes.

toilálag or olíġg (entire leaves) Raphidophora palauensis Engl et Krause. Araceae (E. K. 49) leaves of the Monstera, without holes. Blooming on June 1, 10, yellow spadix, as big as a banana, with a yellow leaf, Ngarepkeî. (Epipremnum carolinesis) (climbing groid) tóngĕt (LED.: Dhónget) Semecarpus venenosa L. Anacardiaceae (E. K. 120), milk is pickling the skin, there fore a medicine against Tinea; KEATE p. 298 (WILS.) talks about the Manchineel-tree, the British got blisters and swellings while cutting it.

tórög (Ipomoea littoralis Bl.) Convolvulaceae (E. K. 29) on the shore, leaves eatable, see belloi.

tovēgĕl (KUB. toékel, WALL. toëchel) Nipa palm in the swamp, its leaves are the best roof for a house (10—15 years durability), wood for bows, also for aprons, rolled up, bound together, and cut at the bottom, also used as a brush to paint black, see basói keam.

tu (M. D.: To) banana.

tu ar gálid “banana of the galid spirit” also sisĕbal, Alpinia sp. Zingiberaceae (E. K. 114) enormous herbs, up to 10 m tall, nearby Ngát pang. Flowers in long pending raceme, fruits similar to rose hip. Maturity Vol. 3.

tu ar kiúiĕd “banana of the starling”, wild banana with black seeds a Imelĭk; as well as in Ngatkip the former one.

tungg a fern. (Fish) see ornament telungg Vol. 5, illustr. 2^g.

u.

uáuċh WALL. a tree.

udúüĕs (WALL. udúüid) tree, many in a Imül, fruit bats love the flowers, see story 197.

udĕvúiĕd milk containing plants as the Euporbia pilulifera L. with its umbels. The common weed, then Tabernaemontana sp. Apocynaceae with big double-oranges as its fruits, that have a milky juice, (see T. aurantiaca Gaud in SCHUMANN p. 502); name also used for udúüĕs.

udĕvúiĕd ra kebúrs “in the mangroves”, a liana with 5 cm long fruits, like almonds that have a keel at the slit, usually two together.

uid ¹ ra pegái WALL. “pot”, a tree.

ukál’l (Serianthes grandiflora) Bth. Leguminosa (E. K. 185) a Iebúkŭl Gorĕðr, trees with enormous crowns and thick trunks (see VOLKENS p. 422), wood much valued for canoes (see story 16); supposedly a child of a galíd (see stories 13 a. 17), therefore called upon at the construction of a canoe; the spear of Godálmelég supposedly was made of this kind of wood.

ukalél a gadíp ² (Cassia mimusoides L.) Leguminosa, yellow flowers and leaves finely pinnate, grassland Gorĕðr.

ulögógug (WALL.: ulechóuch) tree in the woods, fruits similar to gomagídĕ; otherwise burnt coconut.

ulúi liana see besépĕs. KUB. VIII, p. 209, for fishing-baskets, medicine for markings.

uósög Ficus sp. fruits are food in times of famine, yet only the ones of young trees, see Vol. 3, bark of the young shoots as a ribbon for money beads, Gorĕðr, bearing fruits all through the year, story 54, leaves used as fertilizer, see gosékĕd.

urimĕg (Oldenlandia sp.) Rubiaceae (E. K. 101), blue ked-thistle.

v.

váng dry pandanus leaves see gongor.

vúiĕd (poss.: udél) (WALL.: uüid). Milk see ude . . .

¹ vúiĕd milk, uid resin

² gadip ant, úkul black; or poss. of ukál’l?

Scientific / English / Palauan Names of Plants.

Abroma	lap	Oinbeapple	gongol ng
Acalypha	klakl	Anone	soursap
Acabthus ilic.	klollil	Areca	búðg
Adiantum	gaoás	Artocarpus inc.	medú
Afzelia	dort	Asclepias	gerur r. ng
Ageratum	mak	Asplenium nid.	delímes
Alocasia	piseg	Asystaria	gaderieî.
Alphitonia	galebingel	Averhoea	kemím
Alpinia pub.	sui	Bambus bamboo	bevéġĕl
Alpinia (gigantea)	tu ar galid	Banana	tu
Althoffia	gogáp	Barringtonia rac.	pdul
Allophylus	gabelúdes	Batata	gomuti
Alsophila	golú	White deadnettle	gereġúr
Bikkia	rur	Cynometra	ketungüiet
Boerlagiodendron	kesiámel	Cycas	remiáng
Bruguiera gymn.	dénges	Davallia	likarbadáog
Buchanania	geloágl	Decaspermum	kartule
Calophyllum	ptages	Denrobium	sagal chainein
Callicarpa	gáruei	Derris ulig.	kemókom
Callicarpa cana	dup	Desmodium trifl.	golúmed
Campnosperma	kelél a garm	Desmodium umb.	bapelú
Cannaceae	temring	Dianella	gobesós
Canarium	mashoes	Dicksonia	deremarm
Capsicum	meríngel	Dioscorea	detágel
Capparis	kelél a m.	Doclea	kldelél
Casearia	kevért	Dolichandrone spath.	riu
Cassia mim.	ukalél	Dracaena	(orredakl)ang. goredákl
Cassytha fil.	tagelél a gul	Elatostemma	terfíl
Casuarina	ngas	Enhalus	gar
Cerbera lac.	gamerideg	Entada	kesebokú
Ceriops cand.	bivut	Erythrina ind.	roro
Cinnamomum	gogod	Eugenia	gedebeságal
Cirrus	bersákl	Eugenia pend	gorénged
Citronella	keskus	Euphorbia	udevúiĕd
Citrus	malageiánged	Eurya Jap.	gaskik
Clerodendron in.	gamrért	Evodia	kertup
Clerodendron	but a g., plagéos	Evodia pelew.	berór
Coconut palm	lius	Ferns	bukl pelú, delimes,
Codiaeum var.	kesúk		deremarm, gabagap, gaitóug,
Colocasia	klap		gaoás, gokuam, gamarsúog, golú,
Commelina	ngobúreg		goredikár, killkuls, klorovikl, kuágad, likarbadáog, ngideg,
			tungg
Commelina nud.	eáies i debúl	Ficus carol.	lulk

Palauan girl holding a string of Uosog nuts for eating. Additional caption: Guodel agad Mangalbang Girl behind bottle with Rebotel fruit and flower. Glass plate scans, Hamburg Museum.

Commersonia	bebegelút	Ficus	göséked
Cordia sp.	galido	Ficus tinet.	gulul
Cordia subc, (?)	kelau	Ficus	uósog
Cordilyne term.	sis	Flagellaria	bangá r.
Corymbis	koletending	Flemingia	pesúngel
Costus spec.	geisapsáp	Fleurya	gongekád
Couthovia cal.	kalm	Fragraea gal.	galilai
Counarus	kótëp	Fragraea	ksid
Crataeva	gadepsúngel	Freycinetia	gartóket
Crinum	goáis	Garcinia	dadait
Curcuma longa	kesól	Globba	rdil sosól grass	desúm, gasegád, gúdel, keimád,	Merremia	kebéas
	kerdíkes, kerengímes, keskús, keskus	Meryta	gomagídel
	l degel, kuskus, lild, meyrooke	Micromelum	gamangsis
guava	guábang	Mimusops	godebíseg
Guettarda	paláũ	moss	eumd
Helmintostachys	goredikár	Morinda citri.	ngel.
Hemigraphis	degús	Macaranga inv.	bedël
Hernandia p.	doko	Mussaenda fr.	gerregerói
Heritiera	ketunguiet	Nepenthes	melik
Hibiscus mosch.	gongúl	nettle	gongagadeĩ
Hibiscus til.	garamál	Nipa palm	tovégel
Hoya	ralm l. b.	Ocimum	gamádag
Ilysanthes	rtertil	Ocimum	mak ra pélau
Inocarpus	keam	Oldenlandia	urímeg
Ipomoea	belloi	orange	marádel
Ixora pulch.	gerdéu	orchids	gatpúruk, lidél a beap.
Jambosa	gadebesagel	Oxalis	golomud
Jambosa jav.	kerak	palm mountain:	demailei
Jambosa mal.	rebótel	palm bush:	gebóug, gasebúög
Jossinia	kesĩl	pandanus	bekú, buk, gongór
Jussiaea	gerur	Pangium ed.	riamel
Kleinhofia hos.	madudíu	papaya	bobai
pumpkin	kalabasáng	Parinarium	garitm
lightwood	goludeg	Paspalum	desúm
lianas	bsepēs	Pemphis acid.	ngis
Limnophila	eámel	Phragmites	lild
lemon	debégel	Phyllanthus	remógel
Lindernia	rtertil	Phyllantus	dúdurs.
Lugodium	ngideg	Physalis	bubeu
Lumnitzera	mekekád	muschroom	gerou, telilüoch
Lycopodium	gologoiul	Piper betel	kebúi
Lygodium se.	bsepēs e g.	Polypodium	gabagáp
Macaranga car.	badel	Polyscias frut.	psangall

Maesa	bleagd	Polyscias pinn.	pngei
maize	milú	Premna	bars
mangroves		Premna	gosm, Pteris ensif. gaitoug
Marattia	gokuám	Pteris guad.	gaoás
Melastome	kui, matakui	Pterocarpus	lass
Melochia	garamál log.	Qurouparia	gongaitóng
Raphidophora pal.	toilálag	Stockhousia	kerúl
Rhizophora muer.	pkngáol	Symplocos	gabdui
Rhizophora conj.	tebégel	Synedrella	mak ra padre
Rhus sim.	gavés	tobacco	degóul
Ricinus	gelug	Tacca palm.	gelug l.p.
reed	lild, lolo	Tacca pinnat.	sebosop
Salacia	detímel	tapioca	telngot
Salomonía	ouderódog	taro	brrak, kukau, klap
Scaevola n. g.	sérula	Terminalia cat.	mieg
Scaevola	korai	Thespesia	baderirt
Scheria	bakllild	Timonius	gerumēs
Sciphiphora	kuát	Tournefortea	rirs
Scirpus	gasegad	Trichospermum	galsau
Semecarpus ven.	tónget	Trionfettia proc.	bede bedegákl
Serianthes grand.	ukall	weeds	ilemul
Sida rh.	keák	Urena lob.	gosúgod
Sideroxylon	galangel	Urtica	rtertil
Solanum	gongedeápel	Vernonia	gasngeóng
sun tree	plageós	Vitex trif.	klsegedui
Sonneratia	gurúr	Wedelia bift.	ngasil
Soulamea	dekamerat	Xylocarpus	medú lob.
Spondias dulc.	édel	Xylocarpus gran.	demedemekúr
Spondias man.	titímel	sugar cane	dep.

Index Of Known Orchid Varieties In Palau.

Generally the orchid is called lidél a bëap “spear of the rat”; also gatpúruk.

Sarcophilus? Sp. SCHLTR.	Cheirostylis Raymundi SCHLTR.
Nervilia palawensis SCHLTR.	Corymbis Ledermannii SCHLTR.
Didymoplexis fimbriata SCHLTR.	Oberonia palawensis SCHLTR. et sp. n.
Moerenhoutia laxa SCHLTR.	Pseuderia micronesiaca SCHLTR.
Hetaeria Raymundi SCHLTR.	Agrostophyllum palawense SCHLTR.
Zeuxine Fritzii SCHLTR.	Aglossorhyncha micronesiaca SCHLTR.
Vrydagzenia micronensiaca SCHLTR.	Appendicula reflexa BL.
Spathoglottis micronensiaca SCHLTR.	lidél a bëap .
Spathoglottis carolinensis SCHLTR.
Bulbophyllum micronensiicum SCHLTR.
Bulbophyllum gibbonianum SCHLTR.	flower red brown.

Bulbophyllum Volkensii SCHLTR. flower white. (E. K. 125?), but the flowers are not so tiny and cannot be overlooked, as indicated (E. Jahrb. 52, p. 11).

Rhynchophreatia palawensis SCHLTR.

Eulophia emarginata BL.

Acriopsis javanica (REINW.?).

Chilochista Loheri SCHLTR.

Vandopsis Raymundi SCHLTR. (E. K. 179) called gobesós gogeál, because it grows on the gogeál.

Trichoglottis Ledermannii SCHLTR. (E. K. 152), flowers brown spotted with a pure white label.

Sarcanthus sp. n. SCHLTR.

Taeniophyllum palawense SCHLTR.

Taeniophyllum petrophilum SCHLTR.

Microstylis Volkensii SCHLTR.

Microstylis palawensis SCHLTR. according to LEDERMANN koletending, altogether 5 varieties.

Identified Botanical Plants, The Local Names Are Not Known

Piperaceae: Peperomia s. kěbúi.

Menispermaceae: (the cocculus indicus belong here see dup) Pachygone Ledermannii Diels.

Rutaceae: Evodia palawensis LAUTERB.

Rhamnaceae: Colubrina asiatica Brongn et. RICH.

Myrsinaceae: discocalyx. macrophylla MEZ. Ngarsul-forest. LED. see bleáged.

Embelia palauensis MEZ. gogeál.

Rapanea palaunesis MEZ. Ngatkip.

Loganoaceae: Mitreola oldenlandioides WALL.

Mitrasacme nudicaulis REINW.

Couthovia calophylla Gilg. et Benedict see “Kalm” LED.

Elaeocarpaceae: Elaeocarpus joga Merrill.

Asclepiadaceae: Asclepias curassavica L. weeds.

Scrophulariazceae: Limnophila fragans (FORST.) seem and var. brevis SCHLTR. see ëaměł. Torenia polygonoides Bth. herb.

Gisneraceae: Cyrtandra palawensis SCHLTR.

Section VIIIb. Zoological Index.

The fauna of Palau has become known because of SEMPER and KUBARY. Unfortunately, the work about the archipelago’s animal kingdom of the first one, the well-known zoologist, is missing in the Journ. of the Mus, Godeffroy ¹, where only two articles by OTTO FINSCH, “Die Vögel der Palau-Gruppe” in Heft VIII and “Über den Schwalbenwürger (Artamus) der P. I.” in Heft XII were published. They can be regarded as exhausted. KUBARY has covered here everything. KUBARY and TETENS collected snails, which were identified by SCHMELTZ, see KUB. VIII, p. 154 fn. 2; the sea cucumbers and sea urchins in Mus. Godeffroy, catalogue IV Hamburg 1869 and V Hamburg 1874. Under these circumstances and because there was nothing essentially new to be expected I refrained of another ornithological research, in favor of ethnographic research and I only recorded the ethnological important information.

¹I learned from the zoolog. Institut in Würzburg, that no work of this kind by SEMPER’s is known or available. The Engl. work of FINSCH see O. FINSCH, systematic overview of the results of his travels etc. Berlin Friedländer 1899, p. 56.

This is also true for the other animals. Because of fishing only the fish have captured our careful interest and E. K ¹. has in a particular painstaking way drawn the colorful ones, just as she has drawn the plants. A. GARETT did the same in the rest of the South Pacific in 470 illustrations, they have partially been published in I. M. G. by A GÜNTHER; Heft III brings a description of his journeys. Here, I present what the Palauans know about fish and other animals, mainly the names that are still only partially known.

Numerous perfect depictions of fish are in the logukl of the bai, of which many are indicated here. However, I also had young Palauans draw numerous fish. In my bai I gave them paper and a pencil; they drew ad libitum, also some crabs (6) are included; thus the index of the fish include 123 such drawings. They reveal the natives’ subtle power of observation. In order to avoid redundancies, I also refer here to the zoological index in my monograph “The Samoa-Islands” II volume. My own collection and the one of the expedition went to the Naturkunde Museum in Hamburg.

1. Flying Animals.

(according to FINSCH-KUBARY, the Palauan names in brackets, food-fish are mostly nr. 21 and 52, rye of 25).

H. = HARTLAUB, F. = FINSCH.

wings gosépěk (poss.: gosepekél),	nest líóok (poss.: lukél), (WALL.:
feather búsög (poss.: bsegél),	lung poss.: lngél),
many birds d.-pl. 5 ^b , 6 ^e , 13 ^c a. d, 16 ^d .	egg ngáis (poss.: ngiséł).

- Falco peregrinus* L. (kossuk e obukol) WALL. chosúch rubuógěł.
- Noctua podargina* H. a. F. (kossuk illustr.) (WALL. chosúch) gěsúg Bai 24^I, story 23, 98, 137. WALL. mentions chosúch rubuógěł, a variety of sea gulls.
- Halcyon chloris* Bodd. (tanatik) tangadik, king fisher², ritual bird, as a pilot story 72^b), decoration of the war-canoe, as war-bird and Bai 47 VI^a a. 8 VI^b (d.-pl. 8^a, 11^a, 28^f).
- Halcyon Reichenbachii* H. (kaliematak, tramáarak) galiëmásäg. Top- and back of the head vermilion.
- Cuculus canorus* L. (devious).
- Cuculus striatus* Drap (karamudránges) (devious).
- Caprimulgus phalaena* H. a. F. (kobakab) (WALL.: chabácheb death-bird) gabágăp, nightjar also called muleráděł, calls in the evening approximately to 5 times in 1 second.
- Collocalia vanicorensis* Q. a. G. (kobussok) (WALL.: goubúsog).
- Myzomela rubrata* Less. (sisebanjó) sisebangiâu, yellow like story 165, red headed, (also sísabal ngeâu); sis liánged see Bai 142 gable.
- Zosterops Semperi* HARTL. (tetatial) (WALL.: chetitaliál).
- Zosterops Finschi* H. (karambatél) (dithalyór HEINSOHN).
- Rectes tenebrosus* H. a. F. (tutáo) tútau, the morning bird, Laniide, see story 117. FINSCH thinks this is WILSON’S singer, however, this is definately nr. 15 (KEATE p. 302.
- Artamus leucorynchus* L. (mangaleléu), magaluliú, a small bird on Ngardok-Lake, grey on top and white at the bottom.
- Volvocivora monarcha* H. a. F. (kiuil, urgummel kalsingl) Campephagide.
- Myiagra erythrops* H. a. F. (ul)(aiuhl Tetens), ül, common in the forest see nr. 12, sings in long drawn-out sounds in different pitches, like a human being ³.

¹Identifications according to the watercolors of the Naturk. Mus. Berlin, Prof. RAUTHER Stuttgart etc. Mr KÜHNE, the machinist, also drew numerous fish with coloring pencils, which are recorded with KÜHNE, I drew only a few (A. K.).

²In mid July 09, we fed a young animal for some time with boiled mussels and small raw fish. Although the old ones called it, it stayed with us, and accompanied us on short walks. When it got older it flew away.

³People talk about a white person, who wanted to take a leak in the bush. With his pants down he constantly moved on, because he always thought that someone was nearby.

16. Rhipidura lepida F. a. H. (melim adalubtep, sisogarek, taramismiesz), WALL.: melim a delébddeb (delépddep “coconut scrapes”, melím “to drink”)

17. Turdus obsurus Gm. (by chance).

18. Psamathio Annae H. a. F. (sisobarczék) only peculiar kind, olive green, not seen.

19. Calornis Kittlitzii H. a. F. (kiuit kalsingl ꝑ, k. turútum TM)(Calsingle Tetens) (WALL.: kiúid) correct kiúiēd, starling, see story 9 a. 173^a; soul.

20. Ptilinopus pelewensis H. a. F. (a bieb), (WALL. piép) bīb, green; bsagáila bīb, story 189.

21. Carpophaga oceanica Less. (kajéb, Bolókol), (WALL.: bolochel) belógēl (poss. belagelél) or gaiép (poss.: gaepíl), eaten see KEATE 106, more about catching, time. Illustr. d.-pl. 17^b, 32^o and so on.

22. Phlegoenas canifrons H. a. F. (mukrungúkl) (trumagonguck HEINROTH).

23. Caloenas nicobarica L. var. pelewensis F. (laib) laib see. story 136^b, reported from the southern gogeál, however, I received one in Melekéiok; thus also on Babldáob.

24. Gallus Bankiwa Temm. (mallett) chicken, malk (poss.: mekél); in locations where a Dira malk is it is called gerruk. Rooster lakl, hen degú; see. stories 7, 11, 17^a, 61, 73, 137, 140, 172^b, 215. Stone figures Gólei, a Irai; as a decoration on some bai. Children of the morning growing to the east meród re ngós Sem. II p. 332. (KUB. VIII, p. 245 Malkél a Ueytahoñ). Catching bai 29; Fight bai 114, p. 321 (d.-pl. 32^s a. t, qu, r a. u, 28^e, 15^e, 19^a a. f, II^b), pl. I, XIII and so on.

25. Megapodius senex Hartl. (apagáj) (WALL.: pegai) bakái, heap of leaves to incubate gongióng Story 161, mother of Gogit, the man in the moon stories 6, 161, 191. Eggs very popular also incubated (see KEATE p. 301) bai 36, 37.

26. Charadrius fulvus Gml. (tarrarük) (tarrarée Tetens) derarík.

27. Charadrius cantianus Lath.

28. Charadrius Geoffroyi Weyl.

29. Streptilas interpres L. (bunabeingúkl Tetens) bengobaingúkl.

30. Ardea sacra Gml. (sogóú) (KUB.: grey koreómel, white karamlát) (Tet: young sugo, old koroímēl) (WALL. kuél big egret, sechóu, keremlál)segóu. Illustr. d.-pl.13^c a. d, 15^e, and so on.

31. Ardea sinensis Gml. (kolokteákl) (WALL.: choloteágēl) see bai 4 IV^a a. bai 152 VII^a.

32. Nycticorax manillensis Vig. (iraamlabaob) (tramasrabau HEINROTH) (KUB.: V p. 39 young Turúutum; see story 98 Turukurukung) ngiramolobáob.

33. Nycticorax melanolophus Reffl. (cussuck) kūsūk.

34. Numenius phaeopus L. (okók) (WALL.: chogák) gokák, curlew in the legend delārók, money bird of the story 9 often depicted on bai and blai as an inlay. In the evening, around 5 o’clock. coming to the mangroves, see story 54.

35. Tringa acuminata Horsf. (cogongel Tet.)

36. Tringa minuta Leisl. (bungabeinguckel see 29)

37. Actitis hypoleucus L. (karambai ngukl) (karambathel Tet.)

38. Actitis incanus (Gml.)

39. Gallinago heteroeaca Cab.

40. Rallus philippensis Briss. (tariüt) (tareth Tet.), terīd red cap see stories 13 a. 19 a. 115, when there is a noise it is vociferous.

41. Rallina fasciata (Raffl) (olaratta).

42. Ortygometra cinerea Vieill. (sungórok) (WALL.: sngóroch) sngórōg see story 13. Ngardok = Lake.

43. Porphyrio pelewensis H. a. F. (vek) (wak Tet.) vek, swampphen, in the taro patch, see bai 132 IV^a see pl. IV^b left at the bottom, XII^a and XIV 16.

44. Anas pelewensis H. a. F. (a tabarr) dabár (WALL.: dabár) bai 24 IV^a d.-pl. 8^d, bai 4 IV^a. Duck beak

45. Fuligula cristata (Ray).

46. Sterna longipennis Nordm. (Giregiria HEINR.) giregir.

47. Sterna melanauchen Temm. (Kirri girris) diregírēs, white.

48. Sterna lunata Peale (orval).

49. Anous stolidus (L.) (Patáok makát) (Pathauak Tet.) badáōg booby or magád l b., ornam.

50. Anous tenuirostris (Tem.) (Pataok korés) *gārēs l badáo*g see story 19.

51. Gygis alba (Sparrm.) (sogósok) (WALL.: sochósoch) sogósōg see story 141. Bai 17 V^b as a watch bird story 13.

52. Puffinus dichrous F. a. H. (kokaijo) (WALL.: chocháeo) gogáio, stories 117, 143^c. Eggs are very popular. Bai 5 II^a.

53. Phaëton candidus Briss. (túduk) (p. 283 Sem.: karamlál see 30) (WALL.: dúduk).dúdūk-feathers as decoration.

54. Dysporus piseator L. terátēr? see story 88^a.

55. Dysporus sula L.

56. Graculus melanoleucus Vieill. (trójok) deróióg, see story 10, bai 5 IV^b, d.-pl. 2^c.

57. Tachypetes Aquila kēdám, kēdám frigate bird, see story 18, name of the bai’s gable board.

58. gotīlēg a kēlát “axe of the mullet” thus, obviously a sea bird, maybe nr. 54, see bai 97 V^a, A. B. MEYER 81 pl. 5 row 4; kindurgúmēr (WALL.: similar 19), mengallīich WALL., mangalúiiip, (see nr. 14) are words that could not be identified, see also the monster bird Pěágēd arsái story 167, bai 14 III^a.

Additional flying animals:

59. gólik (poss.: golkil) Pteropus sp. megabat, hunt, rubak-food see KEATE p. 193; many times mentioned in the legends see stories 91, 189, 204. Name of a bai’s beam. Bones, Claw.

60. gāsisualik bat. Ornament.

Palauan names of Birds.
badáōg	getitalial	melim a delepddep
bakai	gogaio	mukrungukl
belógol	gokak	ngiramolobáob
běngobaingukl	goloteógēl	olaratta
bīb	gotīleg a kēlat	orval
dabár	goubusog	rubuógēl
delārók	karambathel	segóu
derarik	karambeingukl	sisebangiaú
deróióg	karamlál	sisobarczek
diregires	karamudrenge	sngorog
dithalior	kedam	sogósog
duduk	kiúiēd	tangadik
gabagap	kokongel	terater
gaiép	kuél	terid
galiēmasag	kusuk	tutau
gareslbadáo	laib	ul
gerruk	malk	urgumel
gesug	mngaluliú	vek

2. Terrestrial Animals.

a) Snakes.

*bersóiög*¹ (poss. bersëgél) (WALL.: peersöoch) illustr. 3 from a watercolor of E. K., derebetutú reddish coloring (bai 23 II^b), has the distinguished head of poisonous snakes, but it is lazy, seems not to bite a lot. People say, that from time to time it bites pigs into their legs, which die because of this; bai 23 II^b it is depicted catching birds, thus sometimes it must be rather quick. Length 50—70 cm. Is feared as a galid spirit (see story 207) and as mother of Gorágël (story 13), see also Melekéiok Vol. 2, Vol. 3, further on Góbakraibëdagál story 17^a; then stories 117, 125, 128, 154, 173^a, chant 215 a. 221. It also is relevant with the dead Vol. 3. Money ornament, divination, tattooed.

Fig. 3. Bersóiög

- bageî* money-snake story 113.
kamairs (WALL.: kamá irs) small snake in the mangroves, bites, but is not poisonous.
mangerengér sea snake Platurus colubrinus, long, thin, black and white striped, does not bite, not poisonous. Inventor of the weir, see story 8, see also stories 11, 14, 30^{a.a.}, 98 a. 158.
debëdebës e galang sea snake, green and white story 84^b.
ngüiës (WALL.: nguiïs) green tree snake see story 156. (End of the feast Vol. 3).

b) Lizards ², Frog.

- bërëbúr* (KUB. II, p. 129 burbur) yellowish gekko variety, see segáség.
galaiegang a galid-lizard, see stories 215 a. 17^a, black, in the bush.
gamáidegedüi green lizard, see story 19, 188^a. golubás (WALL.: golubás = tudáol big brown lizard). Varanus see story 40, Vol. 3. Gorekim a. story 10 Vol. 4, , see Vol. 5, illustr. 5^b a. ius crocodile see fish.
mangadelúl water lizard.
meletuemúdës (WALL.: mletemúdes) see story 188^a. Black, weak stripes.
ngerengél ‘lë golú (“echo”) black lizard see stories 148 a. 188^a.
segáség the gecko (see bërëbúr) used for divination, see Vol. 3.
tudeaol see golubás.
dagedägg (dagésög) (WALL.: dechädech) frog; see story 17^d, 215. Bai 16 ornament in rows, Vol. 5 ill. 5^c.

c) Mammals.

- babi* (poss. babingél) (Malayan word) pig, obviously introduced by Malayans; Palauan word melikl rarely used; the poor land is not fit for feeding, see Vol. 3. Sometimes wild ones, story 69^c.
bëap (poss. bëpúl), also bëbelók, rat. Stories 69^a, 90, 150, 189. Bai 69 a. 115, Vol. 5, illustr. 9.
bilis (pilis) dog, introduced d.-pl.7^c, 13^b a. 28^c.
gatu (katu) cat, introduced, though just like the pig, obviously already a long time ago, as it can be found several times in legends, see stories 8, 118, 159^a, supposedly originating from Ngulú (story 69^b) or Mógemog (story 8) illustr. Vol. 3.
kaming goat introduced see story 92^b a. 159^b.
sukerí, also monki, Engl. (WALL.: sigóu) monkey, not existing on Palau, people saw it on Malayan vessels. Sculpture Vol. 3.
cattle (introduced 1791, see Vol. 1) and gone wild. Sculpture Vol. 3.

d) Insects, Worms etc.

- bembangel* WALL.: small ant.
bangikóï butterfly Bai 15 gable illustr. 8 a. in Vol. 5, Vol. 2; pupa nglas see Vol. 3.
biboik ungeómél larva.
eáíës (WALL.: eáes) fly, small iáng WALL.
derchoás small red coral WALL. see gauás.
gabúd grasshopper.
galadngikl bee, small kind, which often builds its combs on the bai.
gamaióng (WALL.: chemaeóng) firefly.
geiékl worm, also Carabus-larva, which is not eaten (see geiúl 7).
gësúg labuókl moth, “owl”.
chetór WALL. ant variety, brown and with long legs.
gud (WALL.: gud) louse; nisse ureg; story 28^a.
gauás (WALL.: choas black with acid juice) coral, variety of millepode.
ius l pelú scorpion “crocodile of the land”, small, rare.
kadip (WALL.: chedib) ant.
mangidáp spider (spiderweb dageîl) see story 12, illustr. bai 49, illustr. 102^b .
marangd (marand WALL.:) coral, variety of stony coral.
nglai see bangikoi illustr.
plsisk small black ant orn.
rekas (plur. arkás) (WALL.: ergás) mosquito, many on Pelíliou p.-Vol. 2, Origin story 175.
tragasu centipede story 17^a a. p.-Vol. 3, gëvul
topkapk scale insect. WALL.

¹ Scientifically unknown, unfortunately the one, which was our model, was not taken along, due to the above-mentioned reasons.

² lizard see story 15.

3. Fish, Whales, Dugong, Turtles.

abbreviations: sp. = spine, d. df. = dorsal fin, pf. = pectoral fin, vf. = ventral fin, af. = anal fin
All pict. belong to illustr. 6, double ones a, b, a. c are from different illustrators; l.h. means “drawn with the left hand”. In addition, there are many depictions of fish. A big breeding place is close to a Irai (story 11); for kělát nearby Peliliou; fish spawn desál. Fresh water fish are: besagáměł, gáoěł, gouklíłt a gai, kitelél, klakesól, mobrěk; fishing in p.-vol. 3.

a.

ái WALL. haddock.

b.

bagungór Variola louti? pict. 1, (KÜHNE 15) see temakái.
balái (E. K. 36, ♂ 37 ♀) Acanthurus lineatus, ♂ brightly colored.
(m) bang Mullus-family, goatfish, especially the variety with the barbels extending to the pectoral fin, grey, red eyes. Bai 18, Bai 22 II^a, pict. 2^{a a. b}. Varieties: bang l díong (bai 94, KÜHNE 7), deg, gadebě-sóböğ, galdepsúngěł, gamísěğ, gasamél, geróng l bang, goeásăğ, túrang l bang, uleángěł.
běágěđ see sekós.
běáděł (see ngěmóiěł) Scarus with big hexagonal, spotted scales pict. 3.
běap see dúkl “rat”.
běap l kómud non-striped kómud.
bebáel similar měás see pebáel.
berdépěk pict 4.
besagáměł (WALL.: pesechámel) similar to Pristipoma, darters (E. K. 6) pict. 5, young geludóud, 30 cm gamertegáp, big, grey, with short head and big eyes, yellow lips, a black spot at the root of the pectoral fin, later on red. df. 10 sp. with red edge, af. 3 sp. Also in fresh water; catch Vol. 3, see geibars, see gúdöğ, buls.
bibrúruk bream, river Ngarsul.
bikl Diagramma sp.? (E. K. 4) dark, df. 12 sp. a. reddish, above the fleshy lip and in the corner of the mouth vermilion red spots; laeding variety. Secondary varieties: bol’lě, ěáus, bogól, debelig, galdě-gědúg, kělálk, koréu.
blěágěđ l tungg (see tungg) Balistes verucosus Bl. Schn. (E. K. 51) bilăğ see kălat.
bogól see bikl.
boloból (Hemiramphus far Forsk.) (E. K. 50) see kiau jumping fish a. ngesúr bai 18.
bóröğ pict. 6.
buběu also riáměł (see tree). Ostracion without horns, yellow tail.
budöğ Chărops macrodon Blkr. (E. K. 43) (see máměł) with 2 spines like boar tusks, white stripe around the tail see story 192. br. and tail yellow. Bai 2 II^b.
bukitáng octopus (see lut) see 7.
buls big sheep bream with bulging lips, grey. Bai 2 II^b.
búöğ see sekós.
bungúk Astropteryx semipunctatus Rüpp. ca. 10 cm long.

c.

d.

debül Lutianus? KÜHNE 33.
deg Mullus variety obviously Mulloidies flavolineatus Blkr, see bang. (E. K. 16) pict. 7, yellow long-itudinal stripe, df. 1 a. 2 yellow, br., pf., a. af. pink. Form of a club Vol. 3, special fishing-baskets see Vol. 3.

degú, (see ngěmóiěł a. gersúöğ) see story 17^a, 61 a. 215 a magical bird (hen).
dekedekúked Scarus (see ngěmóiel) brown and ruby colored.
delilěğ kl’láep small eels, often found in the taro patch, see pagey.
delóko see gudöğ similar to Lethrinus, small ca. 20 cm.
deldemágěł see ngěmóiěł.
děle uíngěł likewise.
delsóngěł Fistularia dorsal are much valued; Vol. 3. Sent by club I to nr. III. Bai 48 see ulag.
děluai see madesár. Bai 108.
demirégěł pict. 8 dolphin illustr. Bai 48, Bai 1.
demúl pict. 8 dolphin illustr. Bai 48, Bai 1.
depedépěs a galáng (cut off taro stem boiled) Syngnathus = pipefish see story 88^a a. 84^b see gobesós.
derebaksós see gonggútěł pict 9.
derebetelói pict. 10.
deríngěł (see karamlál) (E. K. 48) pict. 11, similar to Berschig, black spot on the back.
děruděm (KUB.: Turutum, WALL.: drudm) Diodon hystrix see goloduósog, telebúděł and tiau, poisonous Vol.3, suck at 8 o’clock in the morning, teeth see Vol. 2.

Below: Previously unpublished photograph of clay figurines used by Elisabeth Krämer to work with Palauans on describing various fish shapes and species. Glass plate scan, Hamburg Museum.

desomēl pict 12.

dēságēl Holocentrum sp. squirrelfish (E. K. 27 a. 29), (KÜHNE 22) df. blood red, yellowish longitudinal stripes and fins, prominent sine at the gills; also simple red varieties. The betel spittle of a galid spirit caused the redness (see KUB. V, p. 63, story 14), see kedāol. Sweetheart of Gersói, story 193.

desúi see sui pict 13.

didai see mar conger, supposedly grows 7 fathoms long (12—13 m), yet only 10 cm thick.

didmageī see mámēl.

dmai (KUB. V 62, story 14) a fish, not really good.

dmak see tngot.

dódēg Mesoprion Kasmira Forsk. (KÜHNE 9). A. K. 81, Samoa savane, yellow wih 4 blue stripes.

dódēs small fish, similar to besagámēl (E. K. 38).

dódu close to the family of Lutianus bengalensis (E. K. 38).

dórom young melangmúd.

dudálem Coris variety (see mámēl a. tngot) (KÜHNE 26) green Labride with yellow stripe at the tail and a red iris, protruding teeth.

duderípēk see tngot.

l dukl Monacanthus pict 14, hard skin, tail and fins with yellow edges, body green, at the tail 6 rows edged scales, in the lower jaw 2 gnawing teeth. Husband of tēmakaī story 9 ending; see also story 187^b a. story 74. Illustr. Bai 22 II^a, orn. Vol. 3, because diamond-shaped (compare Vol. 5, illustr. 2^h, other varieties: beap, deialag, kará(kl)duk, gěūilt, maés.

e.

ēáp see madesár pict. 15 excellent fish to eat. Lips thick “swollen” tul’l kedēpikl, catch Vol. 3. Catch like ēáus.

ēáus or iaús Diagramme (punctatissimum?) (E. K. 5) see phot. 1107. Lip thick tul’l kedēpikl. Totem of the a Idid-family Goréōr (see Vol. 2).

eiliu chobúūēl WALL. fish with big eyes (*búūēl*moon) = ilū Samoa, Acanthurus xanthurus Blyth with big fins, see piseg.

g. gabóug (WALL) see gěbóug.

gaeós illustr. bai 95.

gadaóāg a. gadedāog Cheilinus sp. Labride, (see mámēl a. tngot) (KÜHNE 35), small, pointed mouth, grey, body black-blue, head red dotted, up to 20 cm long. Bai 21 VI^a.

gadēbēsóbōg see bang, obviously Parupeneus multifasciatus Blkr. (E. K. 20) pict 16 yellowish, on the back 5 black spots bai 2 II^b.

gadelúl maybe = luléu.

gadéng (poss.: gadūngúl) shark dorsal fin bagál (poss.: begelél) pict. 17. Catch p.-vol. 3, p. 70, teeth p. 128, round wooden plates p. 141, bai beams pp. 200 a. 234, god p.-vol. 3, p. 237 see bai 27 IV^a, 87 VI^a, 115. Also part of this: ngúies, maderart, matál, matmúl, malukeól, piall, riúg, úlāg l gadéng, see stories 3, 8, 19, 172^a, 190. D.-pl. 25^c, 27^a, 28^b, etc.

gadengēl bad a variety of Apogon Amia variety. (E. K. 76) pict. 18, see magad l sebus.

gadéng l bial bai 22.

gadéng ugei e rul uriúl “shark from the front, ray from the back”; mentioned like this in WALL., drawn for me single-handed, pict. 19. Explanation missing.

gadings a kind of sardine, see měkēbúd (WALL.).

gaderópk (E. K. 15) Caranx sp. see gorovidēl.

gadúi or gědúi bream pict 20^a a. b. Money p.-Vol. 3. Bai 85, bai 136.

ZOOLOGICAL INDEX.

Fig. 1—9.

Fig. 1. bagungór.

Fig. 3. bēādešl.

Fig. 2a. bang.

Fig. 2b. bang.

Fig. 4. berdépešk.

Fig. 5. besagámešl.

Fig. 6. bórošg.

Fig. 7. deg.

Fig. 8. demirégešl demúl.

Fig. 9. derebaksóus.

Unidentified photo; man and boy examining a dead Ulepsugel white-tip reef shark. Glass plate scan, Hamburg Museum.

gai Belone ferox? young mordúbög haddock with a short beak and few teeth (E. K. 71) pict. 21^a a. ^b quick, dangerous, 1–2 m long, see ngal a. sekós, see story 172, totem Melekéiok. Attack bai 140; god. D.-pl. 27^e middle.

gaitápěl small coral fish: Apogon orbicularis C. V., Dascyllus aruanus L. etc.

galagil whale, black, 3–4 m long, see medóp.

galás Acanthurus triostegus L. 5 vertical black stripes. (E. K. 53). pict. 22. df. 9, pf. 1, af. 2, see balai, eiliu.

galdepsúngěl Mullus-variety, small yellow vertical stripes, yellow spot on the back, iris red, blue worms on the head, black spot on the tail, fins purple shimmering. Bai 95. story 174, see bang.

galebiop Pristipomatide, close to Caesio chrysozona K. v. H. (E. K. 14) like a sardine, but bigger, the back greenish, with 2 yellow longitudinal stripes, venter reddish. Bai 22 II^a.

galékl Lethrinus variety; see gúdog.

galepět Anampses (like coeruleopunctatus Rüpp., see ngēmóíēl) df. yellow with wide green edge, head reddish with a green stripe close to the eye, which is close to the horizontal band; mákēd l. g. a dirt drawn galipěl búog see ngot.

galevikl pict. 23.

gál lebesói (WALL.: chalbesói) coral fish: Tetragonopterus vagab. Blkr. (A. K. 88) Tetragonopterus Meyeri Blkr. (E. K. 12^b), Heniochus d.-pl. 27e, Heniochus auriga Blkr. (E. K. 10). pict. 24^{aa} ^b and so on. Name of a gable's board see Bai 133 east gable, beautiful image Bai 16 on top, pl. X^a, see story 186^a. Also part of this: klbóub, temungúl, tingeléngěl, ngumk.

gamertegáp (see besagámel) small grey bream.

gamesiór red with 1–2 black stripes at the tail.

Geoasag and mesakalat parrotfish. Glass plate scans, Hamburg Museum.,

Fig. 10—17

Fig. 10. derebeteloi

Fig. 14a. l dukl

Fig. 11. deringel

Fig. 14b. l dukl

Fig. 12. desomel

Fig. 15. eap

Fig. 13. desui

Fig. 16. gadebesobog

Fig. 17

gamisěg see bang.
gáoěł (Chanos salmoneus Forsk) (E. K. 72) silver, pointed head, like grayling only df. 1 pointed and df 2 missing; on Kusae in brackish pond Keméng, called bolea. Bathing water a Imeúngs. Bai 128 IV^b.
gapsál Theutis variety (KÜHNE 34) see klsebül.
gárangěł Naseus sp. (see gonggútěł) (KÜHNE 4), bluish black striped, red lips, yellow line from the cheek and eye to the tail, where 2 thorns are in an orange spot. pf. bluish, vf. a. af. yellowish.
garm Bonito general “animal” see goroviděł.
garměl a marangd “animal of the coral” Acanthurus dark with yellow. (KÜHNE 5) small fish Fig. 25.
gasagíd Scorpaena-Pterois varieties, (A. K. 80).
gasaměl see báng.
gasáu = ulú see kělát.
gasbekái young mesečk.
gaseáog Labridae, grey, head with red dots, blue tail, df. red.
gasěgíd see gasagíd.
gaséngěł Arcanthurus gahm Forsk. (see mesečk) (E. K. 35) pict. 35 a. 36 see gesengel; dark, vf. yellow at the edge, a white stripe at the tail, not much pronounced.
gatítěł Glyphidodon yellowish, similar mud, see klibei.
gěbós Solopsis cilia (E. K. 47) pict. 26, reddish, yellow iris, blue lips, line in the middle yellow dots, df. 10, vf.1, af. 3. On the back a short white line, see madal a garm.
gěbóug or gobóng (KUB.: Kabóub, WALL.: gabóug) pict. 27, caught with the flying hook, see gúdōg.
geiálāg Monacanthus sp., ca. 10 cm long, green, with a big thorn-like big spines, see dukl.
geibárs Prisipomatide 10—15 cm long, light longitudinal stripe, pict. 28, see besagámel.
geiúr see těmakái (E. K. 78) grey with black dots and spots, yellow ring around the eye.
geitapěł Fig. 29.
gělebúitěł see madesár.
gělevěl see maked g.
gěłúg pict. 30.
gemregórōg see mirogorog.
ger Fig. 31.
geremūg Acanthurus, completely dark, (E. K. 28), Fig. 32, see mesečk.
gěrōng see madesár.
geróng l bang (see bang) obviously Parupeneus Barberinus Bkr. long barbels, black spot at the tail, (E. K. 19), bait Vol. 3.
geróng l bung Bai 22 IIa. gersúōg Coryphaena ray finned fish (KUB. V p. 61 kersúuk, young dugúu (see degú); pict. 33. Illustr.: Bai 16 a. Bai 117 IV^a, see mokoróker a. tekú. Catch Vol. 3.
gesál catch Vol. 3.
geséngel Fig. 34^{a, b} = gaséngěł?.
gěsimk see kělát.
gěsívěl see gúdog pict. 35.
gěsúg similar to Platax dark grey and bronze colored. (E. K. 70) close to Trachynotus maxillosus Cuv. Val.
gěúilt see dukl.
gobesós pipefish variety pict. 36, on the top straight, bottom side curved (see plants), see depedepes.
goeásag goatfish Bai 55 V^b.

Fig. 18—22.

Fig. 18. gadéngěł.

Fig.. 20b. gadúi.

Fig. 19. gadéng ugei e rul uriúl.

Fig. 20a. gadúi.

Fig. 21b. gai.

Fig. 21a. gai.

Fig. 22. galás.

gogáēt	Belone variety, see sekós .
gok	Exocoetus flying fish, see story 70. Bait for catching sharks. Vol. 3.
gokárd	pict. 37.
gólik	“mega bat” fish, pict. 38.
goleuelág	(WALL.) short thick eel, see kitelél , very snappish.
golëu val’lag	sea monster Bai 55 VI ^a .
goloduósog	a kind of Diodon see derúdem .
gólug	see tngot .
golúgép	pict. 39 see mangárd .
gomekutútau	see madesár .
gomirogórog	(WALL. gimir . . .) see mirog .
gomóüg	dekël from omóüg “to break” a “bamboo punt”, Myripristis (E. K. 58 Tomb.) so hard is the fish, see karamlál .
gomogúr	Lethrinus variety, see gúdög .
gomud	Pimelepterus? Sparidae .
gonggútël	also uonggútël , the naseus varieties, especially illustr. Bai 12 VII ^a , pict 41. Included: derebaksóus , garángël , gúm , iala , mangái , malangasákl , sëgóu .
gorovidël	(KUB. horuídel , WALL.: choruídel) Carnx , (E. K. 15) pict. 40 a. 42(?), belongs to the madesár -family, young ragerágéd , kers , sportive garm , also gaderópk , kerengáp . Back green-golden shimmering. Bai 5 VII ^b , 12 III ^a . Stories 174 a. 188 ^a , the young ones are caught with gëókl see Vol. 3, old ones, totem, dancing figure.
gorópk	see madesár .
gorúsög	pict. 43. “pounder”. ü
gosés	= loug .
gosúgëd ë guí	see ngëmóíël pict. 44.
gotórd	(Scarus mikrorhinos Bl.) see ngëmóíël (E. K. 17) pict. 45. Body green, venter and tail blue, fins with blue edges, blue-green wonder.
goukerël	see bai 95.
goukïs	Belone variety, see sekós , pointed beak, in front at the bottom thick; similar to gogáēt .
gouklilt a gai	fresh water fish.
gouvóir	see ngëmóíël .
gúbei	back black, venter red, gúbël toágël pict. 46. Bai 28 VIII a. Bai 115 IX ^a .
gúdël	(KUB. VIII p. 127 Gudul) fish from the deep sea (see gúdög) (E. K. 69).
gúdög	Lethrinus (Sparide) (E. K. 62) pict. 47 (illustr. see Samoa Inseln vol. II, p. 158) see story 83, catch Vol. 3. The following also belong here: besagámël , delóko , galekl , galevikl , gebóug , gësiuël , gudël , gomogúr , itotëg , kesú , król , mangës , melangmúd , metungúi , mogúr , rekrúk .
gúgot ráod	“crouches in the mangroves” see sekós .
guól	Grammistes sp.
gum	Naseues unicornis , pict. 48, belonging to the gonggútël -family, young berogúm , log. Bai 11, 12 VII ^a , 48, 114, 115. Catch Vol. 3.

Fig. 23—30.

Fig. 23. galevikl.

Fig. 24a. gállebesói.

Fig. 24b. gállebesói.

Fig 26. gëbós.

Fig. 25.
garmél a marangd.

Fig. 28. geibárs.

Fig. 27. gëbóug.

Fig. 29. geitapël.

Fig. 30. gëlúg.

i.

iala see gonggútěl.

iaus see eáus.

iegád a mederárt black shark Vol. 3.

ibars.

idek see madesár.

ilamrokl (see tungg) Balistes undulatus M. PARK with ondulatory red lines, very colorful, E. K. 43) (KÜHNE 12), very snappy story 49. Sclerodermier like maés, lung etc.ō

ilut komedáol (see ngēmóiel) Scarus variety (E. K. 18) cherry-red, mouth with a green stripe, back green, df. in stripes blue, red green red green, tail blue and green; very colorful.

itápěl.

itolěg see gúdōg. similar to Berschig, red mouth and red fins, a big black spot in the middle. Totem a Irai Vol. 2, catch Vol. 3.

a ius crocodile, Nagrsúl River and in Ngatpang see story 119. Not observed. Story 119, 175. Bai 132 III^a k.

káep see ngēmóiel.

kalálk Bai 21 IV^a.

karadúkl red mouth story 187^b see dukl.

karakldukl (or karamár a medú) Zanclus cornutus, pict. 49 (E. K. 61). Whip keōakaōél Bai 5 VII^b, Bai 18, story 186^a, similar tingelěngěl.

karamár see karakldukl.

karamasūs Ostracion with horns, see story 182^b and story 14, Fig. 50.

Unidentified fish. Glass plate scan, Hamburg Museum

Fig. 31—37.

Fig. 31. ger.

Fig. 32a. geremūg.

Fig. 32b. geremūg.

Fig. 33. gersúōg.

Fig. 34a. geséngel.

Fig. 34b. geséngel.

Fig. 35. gēsívěl.

Fig. 36. gebesos.

Fig. 37. gokárd.

kārāmlál	or ketāu (Myripristis sp.) (E. K. 65), pict. 51 (Samoa: malau) called like the white-red tropic bird, “because the fish looks so red”. Delicate fish to eat. Catch, see gomóug dékēl,psukl .
kātiók	from a terrestrial monsterstory 123 ^b , relative: deringēl, kesebí, rēál .
kēam	(Platax ?) Silvery, tail and fins yellowish, as big as hand, fat; Fig.52, d.-pl. 28 ^b .
kebés	(kāvés) catfish, in tightly packed schools underneath stones. Spine remains stuck in the skin.
kedáol	(Holocentrum) (E. K. 57), Fig. 53 small red fish, see deságel bai 18 III ^b (frott. 78), also belong here: blilāg, gēsím, mesekēlát, ulú or gasāu, ulekmīl .
kedart	pict. 54.
kedēsāu	supposedly eats rats, see d.-pl. 20 ^e story 150. Catch; also a variety k. liéngēl (E. K. 66) perch, similar to Lutjanus , pink with cone shaped teeth df. 10, vf. 1, af. 3.
kedóbēl	(see madesár) totem fish Goréör (see Vol. 2), Melekéiok, Ngaramásāg etc.
kēlát	(KUB.: Galat , WALL.: gelát) Mugil, mullet (E. K. 7), big gill cover, reason for it bai 56 Va, young gamerságal , 1 foot meráel dáob , 2–3 feet kēlát ; catch Vol. 3. Totem-fish a Irai (Vol. 2), Melekéiok; Peliliou is considered to be the breeding ground see illustr. 10 in Vol. 5 a. Bai 152 but-gable.
kēmēdúkl	(see ngēmóiel) Pseudoscraus muricatus C. V. Fig. 4, phot. 1291—2, Fig.. 56 ^{a,b} , green blue, big scales, head like sawed off, hump on forehead, see ngēmóiel in schools tēdóbog (stories 11 a. 18), well known popular food fish, caught like mesekūk , young kerdik , 2 feet long kemetikl , 4> feet long lápēlap ; Fig. Bai 12 III ^a , Bai 21 IV ^a , Bai 22 IV ^a , Bai 118 VII ^b . Totem Melekéiok. Catch Vol. 3, see d.-pl. 27 ^e a. 28 ^a on the right side, see kesú .
kemetkīl	kerdik see kēmēdúkl Fig. 57. D.-pl. 28.
kerengáp	(see gorovidēl) Fig. 58. D.-pl. 28 ^a , 4. position.
keróng	see bai 94.
kers	see gorovidēl .
kesako	bait fish Vol. 3.
kesebokú	(WALL.: kesebegú) moray eel Fig. 59, spirit Vol. 3, pict. 61. Name of main entrance into the harbor of Malágal, map 2, Vol. 1, kumereu , see luléu , see stories 1, 89, 160, 175, 183, 192. bai 2 II ^b , bai 84.
kesebí	see deringēl .
kesgás	WALL.: a fish.
kēlálk	see bikl .
kēngol	see ngēmóiel .
kesú	Pseudoscarus (E. K. 46), Fig. 60 see gúdōg , 20—30 cm long, greenish round with many blue dots, without spines in the shallow water. Catch Vol. 3, see kemedukl .
ketāu	karamlál Vol. 2.
ketikēt	young mogúr Fig. 61.

Fig.. 4. Kemedúkl from phot. 1291—2.

Next page: Palauan wearing a Dugong bone bracelet, and carrying a Kemedukl parrot fish.
Glass plate scan, Hamburg Museum.

kíau	Hemiramphus ; (E. K. 50) pict. 62, totem-fish, eats insects, in the mangroves, see games Vol. 3. D.-pl. 27° right see bolóbol , ngesúr .
kilérs re komedáol	illustr. Bai 22 IV ^b .
kitelél	eel in fresh water up to 2 m long. A goddess in Ngurusár, see Vol. 2, (see goleuelág).
kiúüéd	“starling black” Carus with red lips and green teeth, see ngēmóíēl .
klakesól	fresh water fish Eleótris sp. (E. K. 59).
klbóub	Chaetodon setifer Bloch. (E. K. 10) see gal’lebesoi .
klërdëu	see mámēl (E. K. 30) green with red (similar Cheilinus trilobatus). On the head red worms and dots, eye blue and red ring, end of the fins red, tail end, tri-pronged. Orn. Vol. 3, see gadáoag .
kliál	Scarus blue-red, colorful (E. K. 60), see ngēmóíēl .
klíbeî	Pomacentrus sp. black vertical stripes; also Glyphidodon coelestinus C. V. (KÜHNE 30) see gatitél .
klsebül	(also kesbül) Theutis variety with yellow worms longitudinal, spines poisonous df. 1 (12), af. (7), story 53. catch Vol. 3. Here belong also: gapsál , měás , pebáēl , pedüt , rékēd .
klšgeiép	colorful Julis variety, (E. K. 44), pict 63, Labridae see mámēl .
klúdēl	part of the těmakái -family, df. 11, af. 2, small black dots (Ngarsúl), sharp, pointed teeth, totem-fish
kngot	a fish, obviously similar to tngot .
kodúi.
kóiēl	young mesekūk , Fig. 64.
komorókör	see mokorókör a. see madesár .
komud	sheep bream (Vol. 3), yellow stripes on head and body see bulš .
kotiko	(ketikēt?) silver bream (KÜHNE 32). Catch Vol. 3, in the weir bub l kómud ; see beap l komud .
krol	(see gudög) Chromis sp. Fig. 65.
ksau	Serranus variety, obviously albofuscus , see těmakái .
kúling	conger 3—4 m long. (WALL.: kúling in the mangroves)
kúmerëu	moray eel (see kesebökú) see gaild-shrines . Vol. 3.
l.
lagár	see těmakái red spots.
lápēlap	see kēmēdukl means “big” in Carolines and Ralik-Ratak.
lmál	heavenly school of fish (see měás) story 11. Bai 115 IV ^b .
liengēl	see keděsau .
loug	or gosés Synanceia see story 197, delebák l loug mouth of a trap Vol. 3. Spine chant 197, verse 25.
luáis	Scarus reddish with a green tail see ngēmóiel .
luléu	moray eel according to WALL. see kesebökú a. gadelúl .
lúng	Aleuterus (Anacanthus) scriptus (E. K. 52) 20—30 cm big. Fig.: bai 115 IIb, a thin dorsal spine above the eye, blue dotted (Kekláu) see tungg .
lüt	squid (Loligo) pict. 66 see bukitang see 7.
m.
madál	bai 95.
madál a garm	Scolopsis sp. 20—30 cm long, blue at the top, yellow in the middle, pf. Red spots. gebos .
maderárt	black shark bai 95 see gadéng .
madesár	Thynnus pelamys , Bonito (see gersúög); here also belong: déluai , čáp , garm , gēlebúiēl , gēróng , ui , gorovidēl , gomekutútau , gorópik , idek , kedóbēl , mekeam , mersád , měkēbúd , róiög , smág , terekrik
maés	Monacanthus see tungg , dukl .
măgád l sebús	Apogon sp. white with black dots on the tail; the “deaf sebús ”, here also belong: geitápēl , gadéngel bád , paoiül , psódög , sebús .

Fig. 38—46.

Fig. 38. gólik.

Fig. 41. gonggútēl.

Fig. 39. golúgēp.

Fig. 42. ?

Fig. 40. gorovidēl.

Fig. 43. gorúsög.

Fig. 44. gosúgēd ē guí.

Fig. 46. gūbei.

Fig. 45a. gotórd.

Fig. 45b. gotórd.

- magúr* silver grey bream with lead grey cheeks, long nose.
- makěd l galepět* “dirty” gěľěvél (KÜHNE 8); gěľěvél or galepět see there.
- máměľ* (Ralik měm)¹ big Labride, pict. 67, up to 2 m long, teriěd variety is grey like the bird, didmageĩ blue (see the plant sis), young ngíměr, popular as a fat fish, especially the dorsal fin, see story 6, therefore, only for rubak, Vol. 3, Vol. 2, and story 204. Main totem-animal (story 193); catch Vol. 3, around May with huge fishing baskets on the w. side of Ulong in Bay Ngurumekáol (see story 17c,) and at the stone Milong (P. RAYM). Caught with hooks. Example for the government story 65 (bai 21 IV^a), matriarch story 193. Here also belong: búdög, dudálem, gadáoăg, goálăg, merúsög, klerděu, klsegeiép, ngárengnoróděľ
- mangái* Nasus sp. see gonggútěľ (E. K. 73), long, light grey, df. 5, vf. 1, af. 2 on the tail two edged scales.
- mangárd* see golúgěp.
- mangátau* Pseudoscarus sp.? green blue (E. K. 24) Bai 21 IV^a, see ngemóiěľ.
- mangés* see mesekūk Fig. 69^{a, b}.
- marár* see měrar.
- mar* conger Conger see didai, mardingaol.
- mardingaol* conger, hard tail, with which he pushes himself along in the sand; as dancer in story 187^a, as liberator 88a, Fig. 70 see mar.
- martapetápěk* yellow Scarus with vertical azure stripes on the head and the body, see ngěmóiěľ.
- măsag* black Acanthurus, obviously A chirurgus, because WALL. calls it surgeon or barber (see BREHM Vol. 8 (1892)), see mesekūk.
- matál* short and thick, yellow shark, brutal. when irritated and attacking canoes, see gaděng.
- matukeól* catshark in the mangroves, see story 197, totem Ngrĩ I (Vol. 2) see gaděng.
- mătmut* (WALL.: metmut) stone shark, not dangerous, lives in rocky caves, thick, 1—2 m long, small teeth, see gaděng.
- měái* “sacred” pict. 71, 1 m long, in open sea with sharp teeth similar to gai, caught with hooks, see bai 117 VIII.
- měás* poss. mesengěl Teuthis margaritifera (see klsebül) with poisonous dorsal spines. “Rain-Breeding-Fish”, see story 11, Vol. 5 pl. XIII^a, catch Vol. 3.
- medóp* (WALL.: medob) whale, see galagil. Sperm whale Bai 138 II^b, pl. XI^a.
- megede cheloěl* WALL.: a fish.
- megúr* totem Ngardolólók (see Vol. 2).
- mekěam* Caranx variety see madesár see KUB. VIII 127.
- měkěbúd* (see madesár) “sardine”; catch with spear and net, Vol. 3, (see tebér, gadings) see story 10, 195^a. (Melekéiok Vol. 2) a. story 113.
- meked legalépět* see ngěmóiěľ.
- melangasákl* see gonggútěľ Fig. see Bai 12 VII^a.
- melangmúd* (see gúdog) Fig. 72^{a, b}, long, similar to Lethrinus, colored like a pickerel, yellow iris, young dórom, df. 11, vf. 1, af. 3, red spots at the mouth, cone shaped teeth. (KUB.: VIII p. 127 Malanmuth fish from the depth) caught with hooks and net. Catch, Vol. 3.
- melěgěs* see těmakái bai 95.
- melim ralm* “water drinker” two longitudinal stripes Fig. 73.
- melokidúp* Fig. 74.
- melóp l uěl* green turtle see story 197, see uěl.
- melúięs* (WALL.: melüis) swordfish; “his sword” ngarěl see story 197.

¹ see my work in Globus, vol. 88 (1905), p. 144.

Fig. 47—54.

Fig. 47. gúdög.

Fig. 48. gum.

Fig. 50. karamasūs.

Fig. 51. kedáol.

Fig. 51b. kăřamlál.

Fig. 49. karakldukl.

Fig. 52. kěam.

Fig. 53. kedáol.

Fig. 54. kedart.

- merabás* Acanthurus Olivaceus Bl. a. Sch. see mesekūk (E. K. 68) (KÜHNE 19) Fig. 75. next to the eyes red thick stripe.
- měrár* (WALL.: marár) with yellow and blue longitudinal stripes. (E. K. 63) df. 13, vf. 1, af. 2, Fig. 76.
- merird* catch, Vol. 3.
- mersád* Thynnus variety see madesár.
- merúsög* goálag see máměł.
- merús* ulegodog. Fig. 77.
- mesekělát* claret-red Scarus see ngěmóiěl (see also kělát) pict. 78.
- mesekíu* Halicore dugong pict. 79 (HOCKIN p. 56 musague, KUB.: misogiu, WALL.: mesegiu), important because of the atlas vertebrae used as bracelet, see Vol. 3, pp. 23; see KUB. I, 29; VIII 177, 181, 183, 188, see also almond fish in form of a dugong, Volume 3. Catch stories 39, 132, 180^a; Bai 36 VI^b.
- mesekūk* (KUB. misegíuuuk) similar to Acanthurus nigros (KUB. VIII, p. 242: Misogúuk A. GAHM see gaséngěł), illustr. 5 (A. K. 75) pict. 80. Body dark, blue fins, Af. with 2 red longitudinal stripes. Next to the eye a yellow spot. Big black spine at the tail, very popular food fish like kěmědúkl. On the gables of the Bai is a permanent place (see Vol. 3, Vol. 5) for these fish, young (10 cm) kóiel, 1 foot long gasbekái. 2 subvarieties distinguished: m. bad "stone" lives off corals, m. aimeū yellowish. Catch direkork variety, Volume 3. Totem of Ngardolólók (Vol. 2), related: gaséngěł, geremug, mangés, māsag, merabás, mesekung, pisěg, uáēs.
- mesekúng* WALL. Schnepper-fish
- melim ralm* "water drinker" two longitudinal stripes Fig. 73.
- melokidúp* Fig. 74.
- melóp l uél* green turtle see story 197, see uél.
- melúiš* (WALL.: melüis) swordfish; "his sword" ngarél see story 197.
- merabás* Acanthurus Olivaceus Bl. a. Sch. see mesekūk (E. K. 68) (KÜHNE 19) pict. 75. next to the eyes red thick stripe.
- měrár* (WALL.: marár) with yellow and blue longitudinal stripes. (E. K. 63) df. 13, vf. 1, af. 2, Fig. 76.
- merird* catch Vol. 3.
- mersád* Thynnus variety see madesár.
- merúsög* goálag see máměł.
- merús* ulegodog. Fig. 77.
- mesekělát* claret-red Scarus see ngěmóiěl (see also kělát) Fig. 78.
- mesekíu* Halicore dugong pict. 79 (HOCKIN p. 56 musague, KUB.: misogiu, WALL.: mesegiu), important because of the atlas vertebrae used as bracelet, see Vol. 3, see KUB. I, 29; VIII 177, 181, 183, 188, see also almond fish in form of a dugong, Volume 3. Catch stories 39, 132, 180^a; Bai 36 VI^b.
- mesekūk* (KUB. misegíuuuk) like Acanthurus nigros (KUB. VIII, p. 242: Misogúuk A. GAHM see gaséngěł), illustr. 5 (A. K. 75). Body dark, blue fins, Af. with 2 red longitudinal stripes. Next to the eye a yellow spot. Big black spine at the tail, very popular food fish like kěmědúkl. On the gables of the bai is a permanent place (see Vol. 3, Vol. 5) for these fish, young (10 cm) kóiel, 1 foot long gasbekái. 2 subvarieties distinguished: m. bad "stone" black lives of corals, m. aimeū (see photo K. 1201—2) yellowish. Catch direkork variety, Volume 3, Totem of Ngardolólók (Vol. 2.), related: gaséngěł, geremug, mangés, māsag, merabás, mesekung, pisěg, uáēs.
- mesekúng* WALL. Schnepper-fish
- metmut* WALL.: hound shark see mātmut.
- metungúii* (see gúdōg) Fig. 81 brown with white dots, fins reddish, red spot at the edges of the gill cover and at the beginning of the pectoral section.

Fig. 55—62.

Fig. 55. kelat

Fig. 59. keseboku

Fig. 56a. kěmědúkl.

Fig. 56b. kěmědúkl.

Fig. 60. kesú.

Fig. 57. kemetkíl, kerdik.

Fig. 61. ketikět

Fig. 58. kerengáp

Fig. 62. kiau.

mirogórög young tëmakái, see story 9, see gomirogórög, gemregorog.
mobrëk fresh water fish.
mogálás see galas bai 95.
mogúr (see gúdög) young ketikët, curcuma-yellow lips, blood spot on the breast and gill cover. Catch Vol. 3.
mokorókör (komorókor ot Tekú) the yellow fin tuna Thynnus germo (see madesár) (E. K. 9), bigger than smag (E. K. 9). Totem-fish of Goréör Vol. 2, see story 17°.
molokidúp see ngëmoiël.
mordúbög young gái (story 197).
morogúbël Epinephelus urodelus Forst. (E. K. 49). Df. 9 spines red, on the tail two white lines, see temakái a. paselokik.
mud Glyphidodon sp. (see gatítël) black, mud logol with a white spot on his back (Labride) Fig. 82.
mül see ngëmoiël (E. K. 22). Pseudoscarus (close to jantochir Blkr.) blue-green with pink stripes.

ng.

ngäl or ngälngal (WALL.: ngelngal) Belona with a long beak and many teeth (E. K. 71^a), 1—2 m long, in the inland lakes, similar to gai. Fig. see bai 117; also a kind of shark in the lagoon.
ngarengoródël (WALL.: ngerengeródel) see mámël, purple, yellow eye, see bai 22 II^a. ngëmoiël (WALL.: ngemóel) big Scarus family, called like this, because it is smooth like a spear without barbs (nglemóiël Vol. 3), highly valued food fish, but not very fat; people say that they eat their oil in order to care for their skin, therefore only their liver is fat, especially deldemagël and mangátâu, colored in excess. Parotfish with a beak, especially a grey-green variety, 20—30 cm long, a Pseudo-scarus. Here also belong: bëádël, dekëdekükëd, deldemágël, degú, dëleuingël, galepët, gosúgëd ë gúi (see plant), gotórd, gouvóir, ilut re komedáol, káep, këmëdúkël, këngól, kiüiëd, kliál, luais, mekéd legalépët, (mesekëlát), mangátâu, mortapetápek, molokidúp, mul, ngésngis, ngiáog, otór, pëádël, peságël utengël, sageiër, sebeúkl, ulóitoágël.
ngésngis see ngëmoiël.
ngesúr Hemiramphus (see bolóból, kíau) square, blue and silver, two blue longitudinal stripes, half the lower beak red.
ngiáog Pseudoscarus (see ngëmoiël) (E. K. 1) pict. 84 whitish bright, with yellow tail, df. a. af., ca. 1 foot long. Caught in the fishing-basket, with a sharp spine (story 16); shoal of fish scatter to all sides (story 194); at a Iraï big brooding ground. Bait Vol. 3.
ngimër Fig 85.
ngívót or ngiüët (see mámël a. tngot) Cheilinus inermis Forsk., ca. 1 foot long, black middle line, including one pink stripe, see gadaoag.
ngúies a shark 3—4 m long(see snakes) bai 95 see gadéng.
ngulak Fistularia? see ulag.
ngumk Holacanthus diacanthus (E. K. 39) Fig. 86 see gallebesói. ngungiedil see story 35.

o.

oagad see sekós.
otór see ngemeoiël.
omóug dékël (see gomóug).
oukerël WALL. see gou . . .

Fig 63—71.

Fig. 63. klsëgeiep.

Fig. 68. mangái.

Fig. 64. koiël.

Fig. 69a. mangés.

Fig. 65. krol.

Fig. 69b. mangés.

Fig. 66. lüt.

Fig. 70. mardingáol.

Fig. 67. mámël.

Fig. 71. mëái.

p.

pagey	KUB. VIII, p. 242 eel in the taro swamp, see delileg .
paoiul	to magád l sebús .
paselokík	close to morogúbél (KÜHNE 16). Fish from the deep sea, see těmakái ; (KUB. VII, p. 127 Serranus louti Pasalohik).
pebáěl	see klsebül see Vol. 3.
pelái	WALL. a fish.
piall	WALL. shark, see gadéng .
pikěł	see bikl .
pedūt	see klsebül .
peságělutengěl	see ngěmóiěl .
pisěg	(see plant) Acanthurus xanthurus Blyth. batfish (A. K. 84) Fig.. 87 see eiliu .
pkngót	Hemitautoga centiquadra Blkr. and Julis dorsalis Q. a. G. Blaker (E. K. 31, 55) similar to sisıl , however the fin is red, the tail s yellow, see tngot .
plilech	WALL. small fish.
psódög	(see magád l sebús a. telebúdel) Tetodon imaculatus Bloch.-Sch. var virgta Rich., Fig. 88, see story 187a, black and purple shimmering, 15—20 cm; mangroves. D.-pl. 25 ^e .
ptungg	see tungg .
psúkl	obviously Myripristis Blkr. (E. K. 21) Fig. 89, red with black tips of the fins, see karamlal .

r.

rai	flatfish pict 90 ^{a a. b} (Vol. 3) see story 188 ^b , in Ngarsúl eaten only in bl. nr. II because of the many galid. Fig. bai 13 IV ^b , d.-pl. 25 ^b .
reál	(see karamlál) Lutianus sp.
rékěđ	Theutis , see klsebül , gapsál . (E. K. 2 ^č , E. K. 3 TM) yellow and blue with blue and yellow worms, df. 13, af. 7, eaten raw, Vol. 3, bai 18 III ^b .
rekěrékěđ	suckerfish Echenéis bai 18 III ^b .
rekrúk	see gúgög (see KUB. VIII, p. 127 Arakrúk) fish from the deep sea.
remógöl	see těmakái .
riáměł	(= buběu ?) Fig. 91.
riúg	shark Vol. 3 see gadéng .
ródög	kebúi “miracle fish”, see tngot .
róiög	see madesár .
rsıl	Serranus black with blue dots see těmakái .
rúl	sting ray,- Fig.. 92. Spine rus , speared Tetens p. 286, liver is eaten raw, stories 58, 145, 164 a. 186 ^a ^e , see Vol. 2, Vol. 3, file 125 a. 190, spine 128, 201. D.-pl. 2 ^e , 21 ^e , 28 ^a .
ruměkeu	Fig. 96, bai 140.

s.

sagěłěr sakai .	Pseudoscarus (close to capistratoides Blkr.) green and pink (E. K. 25) see ngěmóiěl .
sebús	Apogon sp. bai 18 see mágád l sebús .
sebús l bad	Fig. 94.
sebús l toágěl	Fig. 95.

Fig. 72—78.

Fig. 72a. melangmúd.

Fig. 72b. melangmúd

Fig. 73. melim ralm.

Fig. 74. melokidúp.

Fig. 76. mērár.

Fig. 75. merabás.

Fig. 77. merús ulegodog.

Fig. 78. mesekělát.

segīl Julis variety see ngēmóíēl, tngot. sěgóu see gonggútēl.
sekós Belone sea needle, Fig. 96^{a, b, c}, speared Vol. 3, as a racer in story 184; distinguished are a male see sagal and a female see dil. Also added are: běágěd, búög, gai, gogáet, goukís, gugotráod, ngal, óagad, sogóu. Fig. Bai 120 II.
semailakěd, sióked also sikěd e kúkět Blenniidae, black, ugly, short head; 10—20 cm, considered to be the king of fishes’.
sisīl (see tngót) Coris pulcherrima Gthr. (E. K. 31^b) Fig. 97, elongated, teeth protruding, blue, head green stripes, also on the fins, tail blue, green, yellow, red; dotted sole see tngot.
sives e kil’l Vol. 3. smag (see madesár) green back with black stripes on the surface, bai 87 IV^b, d.-pl. 27^c.
smúuch WALL. a fish.
sógóu see sekós a. gonggútēl.
sui a. desui catch, Vol. 3.
suld silvery shiny fish in deep water, see bai 26 II^a.

t.

taldi small fish, Ngeaur, caught with a net bai 143 VII^b.
tamaitolók Periophthalmus sp., mangrove area 315, on trees see story 207.
tangadik sea horse Fig. 98 for the long beak of the “king fisher”, therefore a green blue Labridae with a long mouth is also called like this. (see tngot).
tebér sardine, see dance goltebér ruk Vol. 3, see měkěbúd.
tědóbog l kemedúkl (see k . . .).
tekrár a fish.
tekú (see madesár) the Albacore, probably similar with mokorókěr, see story 14 in Diletekú. Catch Vol. 3.
telebúděl smooth toadfish Tetodon without spines, Fig. 99, see derúdēm a. psódog.
telebuilitótog 1—2 feet long with black spots close to the tail (see story 150).
telóg godúi “coconut frond” Trichiurus sp. (E. K. 40) long and thin, set of teeth with big, long teeth, tail is ending in a whip. Channel of Ngarsúl.
těmakái general for all Serranus- respectively Epinephelus var., in particular the widespread E. albofucus; Fig.100, young (go) mirogórög see story 9, catch Vol. 3, bai 48, to be distinguished: bagungór, geiúr, klúděl, ksau, lagár, melegěs, morogúbel, paselokík, remógöl, rsīl (res and blue dotted).
těmakái bungungāu (Serranus) Variola louti Forsk. red (E. K. 33).
temungúl a Melegótog a gāu “pounder for coconut fibers (temáng) of M.” the one who supposedly made the black dirt smudge on top at the back of the body with his thumb, story 155^a, Tetragonopterus (Chaetodon) ephippium C. V. (E. K. 12) see gal’lebesói.
terdáoł see tngot.
tetruángěl see tungg.
terátěr (WALL.: terátel) Pempheris sp. (a Imeúngs).
terekrik see madesár silver (bream?) with a yellow stripe on the side, see story 157, in schools.
terekrik see madesár silver (bream?) with a yellow stripe on the side, see story 157, in schools.
tíau a fish.
tingeléngěl Heniochus bannerfish, 20—30 cm long, keeled scales on the tail; see karamáramedú, and klbóub.
tketāu see ketāu.

Fig. 79—86.

Fig. 79. mesekíu.

Fig. 80. mesekūk.

Fig. 81. metungúi

Fig. 82. mud.

Fig. 83. ngāl.

Fig. 84. ngiáog.

Fig. 85. ngiměr.

Fig. 86. ngumk.

Fig. 87—94.

Fig. 87. písěg.

Fig. 88. psodog.

Fig. 89. psúkl.

Fig. 90b. rai

Fig. 90a. rai

Fig. 92. rúl.

Fig. 91. ríaměl.

Fig. 93. ruměkeu.

Fig. 94. sebús l bad.

Fig. 95—100.

Fig. 95. sebús l toágěl.

Fig. 96a. sekós.

Fig. 96b. sekós.

Fig. 96c. sekós.

Fig. 97. sisíl.

Fig. 98. tangadík.

Fig. 99. telebúděl.

Fig. 100. těmakái.

tngot (see pkngot) PlatyGLOSSUS, Coris, Julis Labridae, pict. 101 green, 10—15 cm long; Fig. bai 87 VI^a, story 190; also add here: dmatk, dudálem, galipēl búog, gólug, ngivót, pkngot, ródög, kēbúi, segīl, sisīl, *t. ruángēl*¹, tangadīk, terdáol, duderípēk.

túgg Balistes aculeatus L. see blēágēd, Fig. 102. Body green with a red stripe; Fig. bai 14 II^b, bai 22 II^a, bai 48, d.-pl. 33^f. also add here: ilamrókl, lung, *maés tetruángēl*¹.

tingelēngēl Heniochus bannerfish, 20—30 cm long, keeled scales on the tail; see karamáramedú, and klbóub. tkeṭau see ketau.

tngot (see pkngot) PlatyGLOSSUS, Coris, Julis Labridae, Fig. 101 green, 10—15 cm long; Fig. bai 87 VI^a, story 190; also add here: dmatk, dudálem, galipēl búog, gólug, ngivót, pkngot, ródög, kēbúi, segīl sisīl, *t. ruángēl*², tangadīk, terdáol, duderípēk.

túgg Balistes aculeatus L. see blēágēd, pict. 102. Body green with a red stripe; Fig. bai 14 II^b, bai 22 II^a, bai 48, d.-pl. 33^f. also add here: ilamrókl, lung, maés tetruángēl.

tungg ra ngoáol also ngaovávēl Balistes (KUB. VIII, p. 134 Tunk anoáol) predator of the “open sea” catch Vol. 3, Fig. bai 22 II^a, a. VI^a, bai 109 VII^b. D.-pl. 33^f.

t. iptál (KUB. VIII p.127).

turang l bang (see bang) yellow golden Upeneus (E. K. 42) see story 193. Turang Vol. 4.

turdingáol = mardingáol.

u.

uáes (see meseKūk) Acanthurus entirely black Fig. 103.ā

uél turtle (maybe poss.: of véu) see melóp, the good kind, the turtle shell golúüü of which is used for jewelry, bowls, etc., see Vol. 3, golúüü, see further on stories 30, 148, 187^b, 191, terrestrial turtle see a Irai Vol. 2, catch, preparation, etc, Vol. 3, Fig. D.-pl. 20^b, 25^d.

uí (see madesár) Scombride (?) Fig. 104. Spearing see bai 26 I.

ulág (ngulak? see delsongel) Fistularia, pict. 105^{a a}, long like a “coconut frond”. Bai 95.

ulág a gadēng hammerhead shark Squatina Zygaena.

ulagēm Coris annulata Lae. azure with vertical red rings, see pngot.

uleángēl Mullus variety, close to Upeneus tragula Rich. (see bang) (E. K. 13) yellow barbels, red iris, on the belly around 10 irregular blood-red spots as big as one Pfennig, they disappear within a few minutes after the fish has been taken out of the water (this was our own observation); three such spots on the head stay a bit longer.

uleángēl ra Pelíliou with yellow longitudinal stripes.

ulekereól Fig. 106.

ulekiuéd (WALL.: ulegiuéd) Fig. 107 bai 22 II^a.

ulekmil see kēlát.

ulepsúgēl bai 95.

ulói Toxotes jaculator Pale (E. K. 45) 20—25 cm see story 12, bai 26 III^b. D.-pl. 3^a.

ulói toágēl see ngēmóiēl, with a pattern like uloi.

uonggútēl see gonggútēl.

ulú (WALL.: ulúu) see kēlát.

úlugei Bai 9

¹ from Ngáruangēl and Ngíptál, the perished places (stories 19 a. 20).

Scientific / English / Palauan Names Of Fish.

eel	kitelel	Albacor	teku
taro patch	delileg	Anacanthus scriptus	lung
Acanthurus	lin. balai	Apogon	magad l sebus
Acanthurus	meseikūk	Astropteryx	bunguk
Acanthurus triost.	galas	Balistes	tungg
Acanthurus xanth.	Eiliu	Balistes verm.	bleaged l tungg perch	kedesau	needlefish	sekos
Belonae	gai	Nurse shark	matmut
Belonae	ngal	Julis	klsegeiep, segil
Beryx	brukel, psukl	blacktip shark	matukeol
Blenniidae	semeilaked	crocodil	a ius
Bonito	garm	coral fish	gallebesoi
Caranx	gorovidel	Labridae	mamel
Caranx	madesár	Lethrinus	gudog
Chaetodon setifer	klboub	wrasse	mamel
Chanos	salm gaoel	haddock	ai, gai
Chaerops	budog	Mesoprion	dodeg
Cheilinus	gadaoag, ngivot	Monacanthus	dukl
Chromis	krol	Mugil	kelat
Conger	mar	Mullus	bang, deg
Coris	tngot	moray eel	keseboku
Coris ann.	ulagem	Myripristis	karamlal
Coryphaena	gersuog	Nasus	gonggutel
dolphin	demul	Ostracion	bubeu
Diagramma	bikl, eaus	Ostracion	karamasus
Diodon hyst.	derudem	Pempheris	terater
Dugong	mesekiu	Periophthalmus	tamaitolok
Echeneis	rekereked	flatfish	rai
Eleotris	klakesól	PlatyGLOSSUS	tngot
Epinephelus urod.	morogubel	Pomacentrus	klibei
Exocoetus	gok	Pristipoma	besagamel
Fistularia	ulag	Pseudoscarus mur.	kemedukl
batfish	gok	sting ray	rul
yellow tail	mokoroker	sardine	gadings, mekebud
Germo	mokoroker	Scarus	ngemoiel
Glyphidodon	gatitel	“sheep bream”	bul
golden barbel	turang	turtle	uel
gilt-head bream	bibrúruk	“Schneppe-Fish”	meluies
ray-finned fish	gersuog	swordfish	meluies
Grammistes	guol	Scolopsis	gebos
shark	gadeng	Conger	mar
hammerhead shark	ulag a gadéng	pipefish	gobesós
Hemiramphus	kiau, bolóbol	seahorse	tangadik
Heniochus	tingelél	Serranus	temakai
Holacanthus	ngumk	“jumping fish”	bolóbol, kiau
Holocentrum	desogel	archer fish	uloi
Heniochus	tingelél	Serranus	temakai
Holacanthus	ngumk	“jumping fish”	bolóbol, kiau
Holocentrum	desogel	archer fish	uloi
gilt-head bream	bibrúruk	“Schneppe-Fish”	meluies

ray-finned fish	gersuog	swordfish	meluies
Grammistes	guol	Scolopsis	gebos
shark	gadeng	Conger	mar
hammerhead shark	ulag a gadéng	pipefish	gobesós
Hemiramphus	kiau, bolóbol	seahorse	tangadik
Heniochus	tingelél	Serranus	temakai
Holacanthus	ngumk	“jumping fish”	bolóbol, kiau
Holocentrum	desogel	archer fish	uloi
Synanceia	loug	cuttlefish	lut
Syngnathus	depedepes	Toxotes	uloi
Tetrodon	psódog	Variola	bangungor
Theutis	klsebul	Sperm whale	medóp
Thynnus	garm, madesar	Zanclus corn.	kamar

4. Crabs.

klom	(feet of the crab WALL.).
brúkl or garabrúkl	spiny lobster. Bai 13 IV ^b (d.-pl. 25 ^b) Vol. 3.
eléed	crab, blue red-
gabēi	shame-faced crab Calappa, yellow red, pict. 108, beautiful log. Bai 82 IV ^a a. Bai 13IV ^b .
gabógúp	winker crabs.
galauoságal	Squilla , eaten. “Death-Crab” story 16 see túdip . Ribbons see Vol. 3, Fig. pl. XIV ³ .
galegéd	Neptunidae , shell is the residence of a Itungēlbai , see Vol. 2, story [197].
gamáng	Carcinus sp. tastes excellent. Bait Vol. 3, star , see story 182 ^a . Fig. bai 1 V ^b .
garabrúkl	see brúkl .
garamróu	Gebia sp. in the dry mud of the mangroves. Favorite food of the people of a Imül .

Fig. 108. gabei.

Fig. 109. kesil uel.

Fig. 111. ksul.

Fig 110. kmaí .

gëgóiog	small crab, eaten, story 161.
górogur	Palaemon sp. (KUB. gorgúr), in the taro patch, Vol. 3, Bai 54 IV ^b , d.-pl. 22 ^d .
guai	Cyclometopen , without feet to swim.
kësáko	land crab in the taro patch, bait for catching sharks, see story 169.
kesuár	WALL. small red land crab.
kesil uél	small crab Fig. 109. gamáng Carcinus sp. tastes excellent. Bait Vol. 3,star, see story 182 ^a . Bai 1 V ^b .
garabrúkl	see brúkl .
garamróu	Gebia sp. in the dry mud of the mangroves. Favorite food of the people of a Imül.
gëgóiog	small crab, eaten, story 161.
górogur	Palaemon sp. (KUB. gorgúr), in the taro patch, Vol. 3, Bai 54 IV ^b , d.-pl. 22 ^d .
guai	Cyclometopen , without feet to swim.
kësáko	land crab in the taro patch, bait for catching sharks, see story 169.
kesuár	WALL. small red land crab.
kesil uél	small crab Fig. 109
kētát (klál)	Birgus , coconut thief, eaten.
kíděl	red carapace, in the deep water (often in the fishing-baskets) eaten. Carapace used as a toy.
kmāi	Neptunidae Fig. 110 on each side of the carapace a strong spine, can attack. Advisor story 80 ^b , story 181 kmil a kikói a. story 187 ^a , 188 ^a
ksúl	running abreast Fig. 111, coming to shore at the time of the moon and low tide and caught, eaten, long hands, pincher black-red, the tip is formed like a hoof.
kum	Pagurus sp., only as bait, Vol. 3, orn. Story 184 as Swinegel, story 169 as a dancer.
lagabāu	P. RAYM.
merau a Bai	Lambrus variety, Fig. 112.
mesáng	spider crab; sagal mesáng Fig. 113.
pkoï	small crab, see story 164.
rai	Leptograpsus .
rekúng	(WALL.: rugúng) crab with a red pincher. As bait Vol. 3, see stories 8, 70. Holes in the ground. Totem Vol. 2.
túdip	Gonodactylus , small Squilla , differently colored, eating small fish; see story 186 ^a .
sengés	WALL. saltwater crab.

Fig. 112 a. 113.

Fig. 112 merau a bai

5. Mussels And Snails.

beságěl	Cypraea ovulum egg cowry as a pendant on war-canoes
bliniey	KUB. VIII p. 186 Hippopus -mussel.
dalsangl	KUB. Nerita caught at night with light, eaten.
debúsög	(poss. debsësél) Triton -snail, as a trumpet, see story 93; sometimes used with gomu .
delebëkái	eatable, mangrove.
dítai	Pecten sp. pilgrim shell.
duádap	or kimd . Hippopus variety.
(ng)dūl	mussel Loripes philippianus , (illustr. 7) in the mangrove swamp, collected by women excellent food see story 202 line 36. Collecting KUB. VIII p. 153.
gad a lengóběl	small, in pairs used to pick hair; good for cutting (story 77).
gasívög	Meleagrina sp. pearl shell, as an inlay, to cut, Vol. 3. As money see rúděl, tu .

Fig. 7.

gasúüþ	black mussel in brackish water; good dish.
geielél a mangerengér	“cushion of the sea snake”(see story 98). Mussel, venus-like, with a finely dentate edge, inside yellow, rare.
gëkóiok or semúm	Trochus (HE. nělakúku) shaped into bangles.
gësegúr	Venus. Cardium -mussel, eaten and used as bait, Vol. 3, Scraper.
gogul a rúděl	long mussel.
gongiūt	pointed mussel.
gómu	(KUB. omúb) mussel as “breaker” of the coconut, Vol. 3, see story 48, see debúsög .
gum	gladly preferably used as an epilator for beards, because it closes well, see Vol. 3, kikoi .
goruér	Tridacna shell with a red edge finely ribbed,blue and grey, small, common, stuck in stones melípës see kim .
gotótěl	Conus shell made into bangles,Vol. 3, used to carve wood, for inlays.
ievud	oyster variety.
ilukum	see Vol. 3.
iregeier	used for inlays for instance at the war canoes.
(ng) kabauk	small shell to peel taro.
gotótěl	Conus shell made into bangles,Vol. 3, used to carve wood, for inlays.
ievud	oyster variety.
ilukum	see Vol. 3.
iregeier	used for inlays for instance at the war canoes.
(ng) kabauk	small shell to peel taro.

gongiūt	pointed mussel.
gómu	(KUB. omúb) mussel as “breaker” of the coconut, Vol. 3, see story 48, see debúsög .
gum	gladly preferably used as an epilator for beards, because it closes well, see kikoi .
goruér	Tridacna shell with a red edge finely ribbed,blue and grey, small, common, stuck in stones melípēs see kim .
gotótěl	Conus shell made into bangles,Vol. 3, used to carve wood, for inlays.
ievud	oyster variety.
ilukum	see Vol. 3.
iregẽier	used for inlays for instance at the war canoes.Vol. 3.
(ng) kabauk	small shell to peel taro.
kerěl	Mitre shell.
kau	red Spondylus , Hippopus , Chama see Vol. 3.
kikói	Areca sp. sandy lagoon, good to eat, for cutting stories 16, 181. scarper, ornam., money. Used as epilator, see gum .
kikói ra gálid	cannot be eaten, Lithodomus .
kim (poss.: kmangél ¹	KEATE p. 192 KIMA) common Tridacna , eaten Vol. 3, p. 74; open klívuk often used ornament Vol. 5, danger for fishermen stories 67, 88a, 169, as window of heaven stories 10, 168, fairy tales 186 ^{a a c} , very big gotkang , usage see Vol. 3, see ukél a. duádap ,
kisem , ripkungal .
kisem	Tridacna variety, smooth, used for blades of adzes (Vol. 3) pounder for betel nuts, thick meat, see story 143, see MÜLLER Yap I, p. 27.
k̃p	for dauái .
ngdūl	see dūl .
ripkúngěl	ripped Tridacna .
rkiyl	KUB. V, p. 6.
rúděl	Avicula KUB. VIII, p. 196. Vol. 3, see gasívog , túiag .
sebúiēs	black pinna ; used as scoop and knife, Vol. 3, story 186 ^a .
semúm	see gěkóiok .
sang	Pteroceras . D.-pl. 23 ^a right.
sungerúk	Turbo .
tú lě gasívög	(see there) pearl shell see story 14.
túiăg	Avicula , (tuioch WALL. big torch used for fishing) see rúděl .
ukél	see story 88 ^a similar to a Tridacna , perhaps a poss.-form, kim ; compare with vuk Vol. 3.
utói	similar to Mythiloida used as knife and scraper.
KUB. VIII, p. 154 also mentions: Sangeraóyok , Kaybúsok = Strombus; Bungarukél = Nerita ; Nguráe = Natica , Dakmus = Halotis , Buyuk = Cypraea tigris , Murok = Neritina , Sau = Nassa , etc.

¹ see story 195, 2. part.

6. Sea Cucumbers.

In 1910, after trepang became important for the Chinese (see Vol. 3), around 10 cts (= 40 Pfg.) were paid for a pound of the best quality, actually for the varieties tamatáměl, gogáēs, bábi, bad lě galéd etc.; quality nr. 2 are bláol, melitú, gěsóběl etc.; 4 cts for one pound of quality nr. 3.

Prof. PABISCH writes in D. Kol. Bl. 1901, p. 448: “The extensive trepang grounds — currently mostly emptied — are distributed among the different tribes and the chiefs are clever enough to forbid their collection according to season and thus protect them from being completely emptied.” —

The natives eat the intestines delág (poss.: delegil) raw, for instance of ngimēs and bláol. KUB. VIII, p. 169 says: They are also cooked with detiměl-leaves; or a thickened Kalakloh is made from them, later on, it is smoked and can be stored for a long time. KUB. VIII, p. 153 says ngimēs are only the intestines of bláol, which is not correct.

babi	smooth on the outside, it is supposedly the wife of tamatáměl , nr. 1.
bad lě galéd	round, ball-shaped, nr. 1.
bibak madál	nr. 2.
bláol .	Nr. 2, see story 143.
gaōás	Stichopus (?) black, spotty; skin is poisonous and is scraped off to poison fish, Vol. 3.
garamrúm	black, see story 197,nr. 3.
gěsóběl	nr. 2 (E. K. 92) brown a. white ca. 15 cm long.
gogáěo	ball-shaped, as big as a head, nr. 1.
gosópěl	see gēs . . .
irímd	or uñl brown with bumps like black heads. No trepang, eaten entirely Vol. 3.
maramárag	light brown, spews out something white and gluey, eatable (see Vol. 3).
mardáol	see galebúgep = money,Vol. 3.
melitú	nr. 2.
mólog	white belly, grey back, nr. 3; when cooked as trepang, papaya fruits and uósög -leaves have to be added to remove the lime in the skin, see story 11.
ngimēs	brown, warty, intestines are eaten, yet only when collected in the morning, because then the intestines are free of sand (Vol. 3).
ngungau kerevél	black back, red belly, worth nothing.
rekál	nr. 2.
sekerél a iegád a dáob	“T-string of the man of the sea” the Bō, Synapta.
sekesákěl	(from melekósok “to cut”) eatable.
sekesákěl ra galid	eatable (Vol. 3).
sengil	50 cm long cucumber, at the end the form thickens like a spindle, crude, black.
tamătaměl	nr. 1: two feet long, yellow like a leathery coral.
ungóu	studded with similar 2 to 3 fingerlike small horns, bai 49 VI ^b .
utīl	see irímd .

KUB. VIII, p. 154 reports: Palungál, Kasóbol, Ayrimt, Molok, Marmárag, Sagasákal, Tmathin, Horísok, Aytól, Teluírek, Thamatháml, Pipak mathal, Argál, Rbótol, Babí, Kokhayo, Karamrúm, Sengil and Bláol.

	7. Inferior Animals Of The Sea	galéd (poss.: galdil) ¹ .
bukitáng	octopus, eaten, bai 34 V ^a stories 63, 134 ^a . Tetens p. 289 d.-pl. 9 ^e , 18 ^f , 24 ^f , 25 ^e .
gauás	coral millepore , in the hair story 202.
delangáarak	animal story 88 ^b makes one blind.
dudáol	“sea-hopper” see ilokugíl .
gaisóis	(KUB. Keyseyos) starfish, eatable Vol. 3.
geiúl, gëvúl ² ,	can also sound like géul, giuěł, geivěl (see giuěł plant) (KUB.: gayúl , WALL.: chiul), the Sipunculida Vol. 3, story 202 fn. 21 a. chant 204, line 46, also the millipede see 2, court of justice, gnome, gëbil gëvül chant 221.
gëdëád	mother of jellyfish (bai 26 II ^b) Rhizophoren , on the gable of Bai 50, see story 188 ^a .
gësokísp	plate-like Madrepore .
gëgúi	sea cradle Chiton .
goáläg	sea urchin Diadema sp. see stories 149 ^a a. 197.
goléměd	sponge.
gúlad	sand worms as bait Vol. 3, as a gnome.
ibúgěł	(KUB: Aybúkul) sea urchin Echinometra sp. good, Vol. 3.
ilokugíl	Halobates sp. sea spider, see stories 25 a. 175 see dudáol .
itol	big sea slug, open at the back, with shell, ink.
kedárm	nautilus. Ornament illustr. d.-pl. 33 ^d , used as spoon etc. Vol. 3.
kelél a gadéng	“food of the shark”the goose neck barnacle Lepas sp.
lovīl, marangd	corals (WALL.: luüil).
lūt	“going back” cuttlefish, Loligo , cuttlebone gosěgósu -spathe, Vol. 3, eaten, catch.
milngól	cuttlefish ^d , sepia , see lūt , see story 13 a. construction of a canoe.
medúgěs	starfish with thorns.
pidápđ	Physalia .
róut	(P. RAYM. p. 42) sponge to smoothen.
tagél a kukau	coral, Porites variety.
tangatang	starfish; orn.
titerékl	starfish Clipeastridae , as big as a thaler; bottom part covered with sand.
ungelél a dáob	“kernel of the sea” jellyfish (see story 187a) and other gelatinous balls.
úngou	small sea urchin.

Section VIIIc.

Index Of The Most Important Palauan Words.

bad	stone, fundamental beam	gabíngel	weirs
bagei	money snake	gad	human, post outside
		gable	board-bai
		galábad	post inside
bágěł	big money	galbákl	taro preserve
bai	men’s house	gáldebegel	club
bakái	(bird) pot	galdúkl	stone platform
báog	(poss. begěł)	galebúgep	piece of money

¹ Also “loot of the fishing trip” or even “something served” (see story 170), this obviously indicates the many small dishes.

² see liana gëvül.

begěł	see báog	galíd	god, priest
bital táog		galitakl	chant
bitang		galituk	dancing chant
blábuk	hibiscus pole	gamagěł	chew a. club boys
blai	residential home	galábad	post inside
blebáol	head trophy	gebákl	adze
blekátel	sister’s payment	gerabái	pattern
blolóbol	love excursion	gogeál	lime rock
blolói	= blebáol	goiláol	stage
boid	dancing chant 9	gokosóděł	canoe-present 7
bombátel	hanger	gólbed	stone platform in front of the blai
blsebud	magic
blul	taboo	gólei	magic
br‘rak	big pieces of money	gólik	fruit bat, plank
bub	cupboard, fishing-basket	gongál	wooden plate
bus	marriage present	gongéd	fishing trip
but l Bai	back side of the bai.	gorángel	smoking grate
deláseg	totem animal ¹	górau	money present
delép	soul, spirit	gorédem	hand money
delul‘l	roasted taro	gorolúi	platform
deraū	handheld net	gosisál	messenger sign
diangel	canoehouse, dancing stage	gosóls	chant
díl	woman	gosúrog
dílukai	bai figure	gotúngel	bag
díong	bathing place	idúngel	firewood
ikurs	handheld net	měáng	sacred
(a) iláot	coconut syrup	metilap	catch of mullets
iléngel	barrel	miěg	tree, almond, food
iliud	stone pavement	mlagei	priestess
imül	see tie beam of the bai	mlai	canoe
inging	= gorolúi	mongol	bai-girl,
kabékl	war canoe	mur	feast
káep	sailing canoe	ngáis	prisoners of war
keblīl plur, kleblil	clan	ngelóng	front side
ked	grassland	nglóik	dance
kelulāu	negotiation (story 194, lines 34 a. 242 line 17)	nglósog	part of the roof
		pelú	land, village
kemedángel	messenger	pkul	cape
kereómel	guild of fishermen	rebái	back side
kerr	slave	rubak	chief
kesólěs	fishing	ruk	dance
kim	Tridacna shell sea mussels	sagalei	friend
kirs	♂ penis	sobaláng	asylum
kléangel	shrine	sop	houses two store house

¹ Totem-fish-meal in Bai 36 Vb, 71 a. 75 Va, 78 I, 94 Va, 153 VII a, etc.

keblīl	see keblil	tágeier	coconut leaf sheath
klegadáol	visit of chiefs	táiu	coconut shavings
kleméai	confinement	tangadik	king fisher
klepkall	privilege	táog	channel
kless	shavings	telutáu	mat
klilt	bracelet	tet	basket, shrine,
klivuk	Tridacna orn. (Vol. 5, Fig. 2 ^c)	tiakl	payment
klou móngolungel	big delivery of bai- girls	tóluk	taro benches, bowls
kluk	a piece of money	túbo	phallus
kukau	taro	túngel	grove
lild (poss. lidél)	reed, spear, penis	túrang	golden, goddess ¹
		udódud	money
		udogúl ma geuid	saying
log., logúkl	decoration, story board	ulangáng	shrine
madál a Bai	front side of the bai	uléld	sweet preserve
madál a kluk	see kluk	úlog	tribute of women
mangalíl	magic	ulogóng	roasted nut
		vuk	♀ pubic.

Ksul crab on orsagel wooden plate. Glass plate scan, Hamburg Museum.

¹ Can also be found on Borneo; note also the name Turan in Asia and — a Greek name in the Etruscan language (see EVA FIESEL, Namen des griechischen Mythos, in Zeitschr. F. vergl. Sprachw. Erg, Heft 5, p. 5 1928).

The Mangle Forest at the eastern side of the Taog (Creek) of Goreor. left and center: pngáol (Rhisophora mucronata L.) with pointed leaves and thin branch-stalks. Right: gurúr (Sonneratia acida L.) with round leaves and ground- stilts

Palauan word index
Krämer	Modern orthography
adëpsúngĕl	chedebsungel
arúgel	ruchell
aulóiög	uloech
Bab l kéd	Babelked
Bab ldáob	Babeldaob
Bablömäkáng	Babelomekang
babelú	babelbeluu
bagadei	bechedei
Bagáp	Bechab
bágĕl Tap ra medíu	bachel el Taberemdiu
Bagés	Beches
bagés l pelú	beches el beluu
Bai ra galdóiog	Bai er a cheldoech
Bairemegáu	Bairemechau
bakai	bekai
bakl lild	bakelliild
bambú	bambuu
banga rungúies	bangernguis
bangedákl	bengedakl
basói këam	besoikeam
bebĕgĕlút	bebechelut
bĕdĕgál	bedechal
bedógĕl	bedochel
bedóiĕl	bedoel
Beoug	Beouch
bersóiög	bersoech
besépĕs	besebes
blolóbol	blolobel
búög	buuch
Dabú	Debu
dag	dach
debegĕl	debechel
debúsög	debusech
Dedĕbelngót	Tedebelngot
del' lúl suls	delulsuld
delárok	delerrok
delép	deleb
delĕrók mo magel	dellerok a mo mechell
Delóbog arungúies	Delobecharenguis
Dengasik	Dngesik
deróiög	deroech
Derungul' lau	Dirrengullau
deságĕl	desachel
didmagei	didmechei
Dile dĕgú l	Dilidechuu
Dilĕpelau	Dilbelau
Diletekú	Diletekuu
Dir' rungŭlbai	Dirrengulbai
Dira bakĕrús	Dirrabakerus
Dira malk	Dirramalk
Dira ktelgáng	Dirratkelkang
Diragamartál	Dirrachemertall
Diragĕlségĕl	Dirrachelsechel
Diraimogoáng	Dirramechoang
Diramangiâu	Dirremengiau
Diraulogŭl	Dirraulechull

édĕl	iedel
găbingĕl	chebingel
Gad ĕ gadúg	Chadecheduch
Gad r deî	Aderdei
Gadabedei	Edebetei
Gadjbar	Chesebar
Gádlbai	Adelbai
Gadrekerói	Aderkeroi
gai	chai
gal' lebesói	chelbesoi
galâl' lákl	kellechakl
Galáp	Elab
galbákl	chelbakl
galdáĕl	cheldael
galebúgép	chelebuchebe
Galebŭl	Chelebuul
galegĕd	cheleched
galid a Ugél kobasádĕl	chelid Uchelkebesadel
galid Galauoságăal	chelid Chelauesakl
galid ra kéd,	chelid er a ked
galidĕgád Golungĭs	chelidechad Olungiis
galings	challings
galsbóng	chelsbong
Galsegei	Elsechei
gamaidegĕdúi	chemaidechedui
gamáng	chemang
Gamaraiĕk	Chemeraech
Gamasiógĕl	Emesiochel
gameldĭl	kemeldiil
Gámliangĕl	Ngchemiangel
Garagár	Erechar
garamál	cheremall
garamelómĕs	Ngaramellomes
garamrúm	cheremrum
Garangákl	Cherrengakl
Gareómĕl	Kereomel
gasbógöp	chesbocheb
Gataulúkĕs	Etaulukes
Gatiroir	Etiruir
Gátu	Katuu
Gĕbil Ngarsúl	Ebil Ngersuul
Gĕdĕlág	Edelach
géiag	chiiach
geielél a man-gerengér	chillel a mengerenger
Gĕlagáng	Elechang
Gereómĕl	Chereomel
Gĕriu	Eriu
Gersoï	Ersoi
Gĕsĕbei	Esebei
gesél	chesel
Gĕsurói	Esuroi
Gĕúgĕl	Euchel
Gobagád	Obechad
Gobagád	Obechad
Gobagád l tmél	Obechad el tmel
Gobagádra Tegĕiĕbai	Obechad er a Techikebai
Gobágĕlbagĕlsekerél	Obechebakelsekerel
Góbak	Obak
Gobak ĕ ra ulögĕtóng	Obak er a Ulechetong
Góbak rai bedagál	Obak er a Ibedechal

Góbak ra ilámĕs	Obakrailames
Gobak ra mangaláng	Obak er a Mengelang
Gobak ra tkedĕsau	Obak er a Tkedesau
Góbak rabâu	Obakerbau
Góbakraluîl	Obakraluil
Gobakul	Obekul
godensél	osengdel
Gogádu	Ochado
gogáio	ochaeo
Gogeál	Ocheall
Gogit	Ochit
Goikúl	Oikull
Gokâu	Okau
Gókebai	Okebai
Gokerdŭl	Okerduul
Gól	Choll
gólbed	olbed
gólbed ĕ kal	olbedekall
golegútĕl	olechutel
Gólei	Ollei
golekál	kelekall
golik	olik
Gólilai	Olilai
Golterúkl	Olterukl
Golóug	Olouch
golúdĕg	oludech
gomáil	omail
Gomakatl	Omekatl
Gomelátĕgmólög	Omelatechemolech
gomoklógĕl	omeklochel
Gomológöl	Omelochel
Gomrekóngĕl	Omrekongel
gomsaubúkl	omesaubukl
gomu	omuu
Gomŭgtókói	Omucheltekoi
Gomulkĕam	Omuchelkeam
gongadĕding	ongadeding
gongál	ongall
Gongĕai	Ongeai
gongĕsĭl	ongesiil
gongesmól	ongesmoll
Gongĕtiu	Ongetiu
Gongĕtrúiüg	Ongeteruich
Gongĕuid	Ongeuid
Gongobítĕl l dĕlág	Ongebitel el delach
góngolungĕl	ongelungel
gongór	ongor
gongráol.	ongraol
Goperdóng	Eberdong
Górabag	Orabech
Gorágĕl	Orachel
górau	orau
Gordĭlsau	Ordiilsau
gorédĕm	oredem
Gorekim	Orrekim
Góreng	Oreng
Gorĕör	Oreor
goretél a këbĕás	orretel a kebeas
gorovidĕl	oruidel
gorovíkl	oreuikl

gorul	orul
gorúsög	orusech
Gosalmelég	Odalmelech
gosĕkĕd	oseked
Gosilék	Osilek
gosm	chosm
Gosuláp	Osulab
gotobádĕl	otebadel
gotúngĕl	otungel
Goukobókop	Oukebokeb
Goukúl	Oikull
Gourót	Ourot
góutang	outang
Gĕuid bersĕgĕl	Euid bersechel
Guáp	Uab
gúdog	chudech
gúiĕt	chuit
Guódĕl	Chuodel
Guóng	Uong
Guóng of Ngaragĕlük,	Uong er a Ngercheluuk
iápĕs	eabed
Ibedagáng	Ibedechang
Idelĕgĕdei	Idelechedei
Iegád ra ugúp	Iechad er a Uchub
Iegádrengĕl	Ieachaderengel
Ilabangelŭl	Ilabengeluul
Ilúluk	Ilulk
Iluógĕl	Iluochel
Imelĭk	Imeliik
Irágĕl	Irachel
Irai	Irrai
Imŭl	Imuul
Irágĕl	Irachel
Itumrúkl	Itemeruchel
Jegád	Iechad
Jegádĕgúi	Iechadechui
Jegárengĕl	Ieachaderengel
Jélag	Yelech
Jóul pelú	Ioulbeluu
Jóuldaob	Iouldaob
Joulömäkáng	Ioulomekang
kaberúög	kaberuuch
Karakár	Kerrekar
keblĭl	kebliil
Ked ra golakáng	Ked er a Olekang
Kekamángĕl	Kekamangel
Kélebis	Kelebid
Kesebokú	kesebekuu
Keúklgolóng	Keiuklchelong
Kiúiĕd	kiuid
Klbáiĕl	Klbael
Kldngŭl ra Tĕgamding	Kldnguul er a Techemding
Kldlolél	Keldorolel
klegádáol	klechedaol
komedáol	kemedaol
Kulúkl	Kulukel
kum	chum
lap	lab
logukl	llechukl
madál	medal

madál a iégád
Madal ngateluáng
Madálabai
Madalaî
Madatumlógët
Magád re ngädäsáker
Magédageî
Mageî deûíd
Makáep
Makëáld
Malágal Mangal'lákl
mangatakl Mangerengér
mangesekés
Mangidáp
Matageiau
Matáng rengos
Medegei Omäsagäl læ galë`gëd
Medechii Omsechelel a cheleched Medegeîpélau
Medórom Melekéiok meletemútës Melíp
melógöd a bad
Meregórögbödkú
Merúpélau
mesekiu l miëg mesekûk Metëulögól
Metúkër uikul miëg mirogórog
Mlagél
Mogoáng mokorókër mólog monggóngg mongongau
mora trúiug
Nagregú
Nagrekobasáng
Ngabëángëd
Ngabiúl
Ngabúkëd
Ngalekél
ngam gogúi
Ngamai Bay
Ngamëau
Ngamólei
Ngapedég
ngara këléd r tiáng
Ngará mëgau
Ngarabau
Ngaradermáng
Ngaragamér
Ngaragarm
Ngaragatang Ngaraklemadël

medal a iechad
Medal Ngeteluang
Medalabai
Medalaih
Medatumeloket
Mechad er a Ngedesaker
Meched a chei
Mechideuid
Mekaeb
Mekeald
Ngemelachel
Mengellakl
mengetakl Mengerenger
mengesekes
Mengidab
Matchiiiau
Metangerngos
Medechiiibélau
Medorm
Melekeok
meletemudes Melib
meloched a bad
Merechorechebekuu
Merubélau
mesekiu el miich mesekuuk Meteulechol Metuikerikull
miich mirechorech
Mlechei
Mechoang mecherocher molech mengchongch mengungau mo er a teruich
Ngerecheu
Ngerkebesang
Ngebeanged
Ngebiul
Ngebuked
Ngelekel
ngamekechui
Ngemai
Ngemeau
Ngemolei
Ngebedech
ngara a keled er tiang Ngermechau
Ngerbau
Ngerderemang
Ngerchemel
Ngaracharm
Ngerchetang
Ngereklemadel

Ngaramásăg
Ngaramedángep
Ngaramedei
Ngaramelég
Ngarameskáng
Ngarameténgël
Ngaramlungú
Ngarapelâu
Ngaratogadí
Ngarbád l mánğël
Ngarbagéd re ngûl
Ngarbagédasau
Ngarbágësis
Ngardebotár
Ngardíms
Ngardolólok
Ngardórok
Ngarduais
Ngarebökö
Ngaregamai,
Ngaregamaiin
Ngaregebál
Ngaregemûl
Ngaregëu
Ngaregókł
Ngaregól
Ngaregolóng
Ngaregúr
Ngarekeai
Ngarekeklau
Ngarekesauáol
Ngarekesauáol
Ngarekobasáng
Ngaremadeliáng
Ngaremangiau
Ngaremediu
Ngaremonge
Ngarengasáng
Ngarenggól
Ngargëlngáël
Ngariáp
Ngariélëp
Ngarietët
Ngarmíd
Ngarsúl
Ngarsúng
Ngarsúng
Ngarturóng
Ngáruangël
Ngarukeuid
ngásăg-Ngasiás
Ngatanggau
Ngatëlkou
Ngatëlngál
Ngatkip
Ngátmadei
Ngatmél
Ngatpáet
Ngëbúrëg

Ngermsasech
Ngermedangeb
Ngermedei
Ngermelech
Ngermeskang
Ngermetengel
Ngeremlengiu
Ngerbelau
Ngaratochedii
Ngerbadelmangel
Ngerbeched rengul
Ngerbechedesau
Ngerbechesis
Ngerdebotar
Ngerdims
Ngerdelolk
Ngerdorech
Ngerduais
Ngerbekuu
Ngerechemai
Ngerechemai
Ngerchebal
Ngerechemuul
Ngercheu
Ngerchokł
Ngerchol
Ngarchelong
Ngerechur
Ngerkeai
Ngerekekłau
Ngerekesoaol
Ngerkesouaol
Ngerekebesang
Ngermadeliang
Ngeremengiau
Ngeremdiu
Ngermong
Ngerngesang
Ngerengchol
Ngerchelngael
Ngeriab
Ngerielb
Ngireteet
Ngermid
Ngersuul
Ngersung
Ngersung
Ngerturong
Ngeruangel Ngerukeuid ngasech Ngesias
Ngetengchau
Ngetelkou
Ngetelngal
Ngetkib
Ngetmedei
Ngetmel
Ngetbaet
Ngeburech

Ngëdelóg
Ngëdíp
Ngëlíl
Ngëregóng
ngerenél'lē gölú
Ngërugóp
Ngërulák
Ngërupsáng
Ngërutëgeî
Ngësëgeî
Ngesisëg
Ngëúngël
Nggamaséd
Nggei
Nggeiangël
Nggëssar
Nggús
Nggúi
Ngira dedemâu
Ngira rois
Ngiragalsákl
Ngiragaramëu
Ngiragëtet
Ngirangämeúsög
Ngiraptelulagáng
Ngirasagësüg
Ngiratágër
Ngireklsóng
Nglbáng
Ngorót
Ngoseklí
Ngrîl ngúiës Nguruktúkdápël
Ngurultágël
Ngurungevíkl
Ngeiángés
Ngurungór
Ngurusár
Ogwit olegëtóköl omtëge
palâu re gúr
Pëágëd arsaî
Pedúl
Pélau
Pelilioü
Pelú ra diák læmád
Pelú ra geimongerél
Pelú ra tep
Pelúgoár
peng Pipirói
Pkul a dúdës
Pkulagobagád
Pkulapelú
Pkulatáp rivál Pkurengël.
Pkurengesúkl
plagéos

Ngedeloch
Ngedib
Ngellil Ngerecgibg
ngerenellecheluu
Ngeruchob
Ngerullak
Ngerubesang
Ngerutechei
Ngesechei
Ngesisech
Ngeiungel
Ngchemesed
Ngchei
Ngcheangel
Ngchesar
Ngchus
Ngchui
Ngiradedmau
Ngirarois
Ngirachelsakl
Ngiracheremeu
Ngircheteet
Ngirmgemeiusech
Ngirabdelulachang
Ngirasechesuch
Ngiratacher
Ngiraklsong
Nglabang
Ngerot
Ngoseklii
Ngruil
nguis Ngerukdabel
Ngerultachel
Ngerungeuikl
Ngeanges
Ngerungor
Ngerusar Okeuid oleketokel omtechei belaurechur Beachedarsai
Bedul
Belau
Beliliou
Beluu er a diak lemad
Beluu er a Chimongerel
Beluu er a teb Beluucheuar
beng Bibiroi
Bkul a dudes
Bkulachobe Chad
Bkulabeluu
Bkulatabriual
Bkulrengel Bkulrengesukl blacheos

psódog ptágës ptangg
Ptil a ngabárd
Ptil l ngardók.
Regeirei læ gad
Regeirei lægalid
Regeiúngël
Regúgër ra Tëgëkí
Rekâmesikt
Rekesiváng
Rekevis
Remád læ galíd
Rësëgeî, Roispelú
roro rsél rubagád Rubasásăg
rúl Runguelâu
Rüngül ra mogoáng
Rüngülbai
Sagageiegáng
Sagamidár
Săgâmús Siángëldep sisabangiau sngórög sogósög Tăgetbós
tamaitolók Tangregói
tatangelél Tegógo
tekú Tëlamës, telegeiër
teltul
Teluk a runguiës
Tëmkaî
terîd
Tëru lekebil
Típëtíp a kmîëg
tiválag Tkús
Tmëlógöd
Toágel míd
Toágël Pélau Toeagël'lióu togotogosúld
Toi ra málát a ëárs
Tpardilügës
Tpereákl
Tuágël mlungúi
Túböglráod
Tugërëmél
Tukekli
Túkûr
Túrang re ngësëgeî

bsodech btaches btangch
Btilngebard
Btil Ngardok
Rechireilechad
Rechireilechelid
Recheiungel
Rechucher er a Techekii
Rekemesikt
Rekisiuang
Rekeuis
Remadelchelid
Ngesechei
Roisbeluu
rorou resel rubechad Rubasech
rrull
Rengullau
Renguul er a Mechoang
Rengulbai
Sechachichang
Secharmidar
Sechamus Siangeldeb chesisebangiau sngorch sechosech Techetbos
temaitolok
Tangerkoi
Tatengelel
Techocho
tekuu Tellames telechiir
teltul
Teluk er a renguis
Temekai teriid Terulekebil Tibetibekmiich
tiualech
Tkud
Tmeloched
Toachelmid
Tochael Belau
Tocheliou
techotechsuld
Toi er a Melat a ears
Tbardiluches
Tbereakl
Toachelmlungui
Tubokelraod
Tuchermel
Tukeklii
Tuker
Turang er a Ngesechei

turūdēl	terudel
Uauì ra gemūl	Uaurechemuul
Uedīl railámēs	Uadil er a llames
Uékeūíd	Ukeuid
Ugél kldéu	Uchelkldeu
Ugélagadéng	Uchelchedeng
Ugéliángēd	Uchelianged
Ugélkldéu	Uchelkldeu
Ugélkóbasádēl	Uchelkebesadel
Ugélmekedíu	Uchelmekediu
Ugélngabárd	Uchelngebard
Ugélpelú	Uchelbeluu
Ugélsúng	Uchelsung
Ugéltmél	Ucheltmel
Ugér a roisáng	Uchelroisang
ugul	uchul
Ugul a gúiēt rengatmél	Uchul a chuit er a ngetmel
Ukál	Ukall
Ulābāgád	Ulebached
ulangáng	ulengang
ulekngál	ulekngall
Uli máng	Uliamang
ulítēg	ulitech
úlōg	ulech
Ulogúl	Ulechull
uósog	uosech
vék	uek
vuk	uuk

Please note this copy is read-only, and not suitable for sharp printing.

The large 9 x 12” full printed set of Palau Volume 1-7 is available for sale at the Belau National Museum and Etpison Museum gift shops for USD $175.

All proceeds from this non-profit translation project will be used to re-print these books.

